AND YOU ARE...?

Don Moore
Boat Designer/Builder
www.waterdancing.com

How long have you been making boats?
Pretty much all of my life! My dad started the business back in 1955, so I've grown up around them.

Can the average person come in here and build a boat?
Oh yeah. Everybody that comes in here, you know, are not boat builders. There's always someone building a boat that you wouldn't believe would have an interest. They pick up the kits in the winter and start working on them and hopefully have them done around this time of year. A fellow told me one time that he's worked in an office all of his life pushing papers, and when he finished his boat he said it was the most fun he's ever had in his entire life!

What are your boats built from?
The wood is we use is Okoume Mahogany. It is a fast growing tree that is farmed in Africa, specifically Gabon. Okoume is used for many different purposes. The old growth stuff has been gone since the '70s, but the new stuff is still plentiful. Wood is lighter and stronger than fiberglass or plastic when covered with an epoxy. The black epoxy on the bottom is as tough as steel. You can drag them over barnacles and rocks and things and they won't get gouged like a plastic or fiberglass boat would. When it starts to wear you just give a little scuff sand, roll on another coat, and it will last for another ten years.

PITYTV

GIVEN THE SAD STATE OF OUR CITY'S MEDIA LANDSCAPE, it's depressing to see Edmonton's Citytv, and other local CHUM affiliates, giving the axe to 47 of their employees, eliminating Citytv's 6 and 11 p.m. newscasts, and expanding that paragon of hard-hitting journalism, Breakfast Television, to four hours every morning (Brunch Television?).

Not that they had much choice. Citytv's 6 p.m. newscast pulled in about 4,000 viewers, compared to CFRN's 137,000.

The layoffs occured just hours before CHUM announced a buyout by Bell Globemedia.

The question now is: will this shake-up result in a sharper, more in-touch and locally-focused source of news and entertainment, or will it just mean more syndicated movies and reruns of American sitcoms?

WE'RE INNOCENT, WE PROMISE

IN THE WAKE OF THE EPS' MANY RECENT SCANDALS, FROM THE Overtime debacle, to allegations of excessive force on Whyte Ave. during the Stanley Cup playoffs, to the July 8 death of an in-custody carjacking suspect, it's probably a good idea for investigations of police wrongdoing to be handled outside the force. In fact, it's a damn good idea regardless.

And last Wednesday, Alberta Solicitor General Harvey Cenaiko announced just that an "integrated anti-corruption team," made up of veteran police officers from Edmonton and Calgary that will investigate complaints against police in both cities, rather than letting investigations be handled in-house.

About time, we say, but it's probably not enough.

Let's also consider Edmonton NDP MLA David Eggen's suggestion that the new team employ civilian oversight, to ensure its true independence of either police force. After all, the cops don't let the accused investigate themselves, now do they?

ART GALLERY FIGHTS CITY HALL

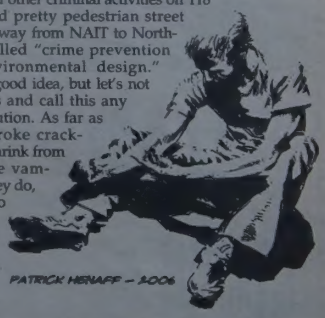
WHEN LATITUDE 53 CHANGED aDDRESSES A FEW YEARS BACK, a property tax exemption got lost in the shuffle, putting the organization on the hook for $11,500 it didn't need to pay.

Latitude had informed the city of the move, but somehow the tax department didn't get the memo, and didn't bother investigating when notices mail was returned. Latitude went to council on bended knee last week asking for a refund. Coun. Dave Thiele's motion to return $7,800 was voted down by the executive committee, which found the charitable arts organization was responsible for the error. Instead, the committee opted to offer 53 a $4,000 refund.

Latitude 53 development officer Lisa Tougas summed up the situation nicely: "You can bet they would've moved heaven and earth to find us if we hadn't paid our taxes."

NEW CRIME-FIGHTING STRATEGY: PRETTY LIGHTS

THE CITY'S LATEST PLAN TO GET OPEN PROSTITUTION, muggings, and other criminal activities off 118 Ave. is to add pretty pedestrian street lamps all the way from NAIT to Northlands. It's called "crime prevention through environmental design." Maybe it's a good idea, but let's not kid ourselves and call this any kind of a solution. As far as we know, broke crackheads don't shrink from the light like vampires. Until they do, don't expect to see many folks out for a powerwalk at dusk.



PATRICK HENAFF – 2006

QUOTE OF THE WEEK:

"Russia's big, and so is China. Yo Blair, what're you doing? Are you leaving?"

—U.S. President George Bush, speaking to Tony Blair at a private G8 luncheon in St. Petersburg, Russia

Oil industry, Energy minister brush off Lougheed alarm

WORRIED THAT WE'RE GIVING away our non-renewable resources for little more than a handshake and a smile, former Premier Peter Lougheed has called for a review of Alberta's royalty structure.

Lougheed's statement earned a long, red-baiting reply from former Petro-Canada investor relations director Fred Kerr. In the Globe and Mail, Kerr compared Lougheed's call for a review to Soviet central planning and said it was something one expects from "Bolivarian cuadillos [revolutionary leaders] and lesser environmentalists."

Lougheed wasn't the only one inviting the oil industry's wrath. The Alberta NDP have also called for a review, as has Tory leadership hopeful Mark Norris.

Energy Minister Greg Melchin has responded to those calls saying he has already reviewed the royalties. His conclusion: the meagre penny paid on every dollar of revenues from new oil sands facilities is fair as can be.

Melchin, however, has yet to produce a single public document showing that the review actually happened. NDP leader Brian Mason wrote the minister a letter last Thurday asking him to put the documents on the table.

"Was a review in fact done? Who did it? When was it done? What were the terms of reference? And finally, what were the results?" the letter demands.

"Honestly, I don't think [the review] really even happened," Mason says.

"People in the [Energy] department are saying we're in constant communication with the industry, we're continually reviewing royalities, all of which to me is just smoke."

Alberta pulled in $1.4 billion in royalties on crude oil, plus another $950 million for synthetic crude and bitumen royalties in fiscal 2005-2006.

Suncor spokesman Brad Bellows says changing the royalty structure could threaten those revenues. He claims higher royalty payments could discourage investors the same way Venezuelan leader Hugo Chavez's nationalization of that country's off-shore oil resources discouraged investors.

> "Where are they going to go, Iraq? Venezuela?"
> NDP LEADER BRIAN MASON

Mason scoffs at the comparison.

"Does he really think that sophisticated voters of Alberta are going to buy that line of baloney? They built Suncor long before oil hit $15 dollars per barrel, now it's at $75.00... Where are they going to go, Iraq? Venezuela?"

Melchin, however, appears to have eaten the baloney whole.

"You can't just change stability in financial agreements," Melchin told the Canadian Press after a Calgary cabinet meeting last week. "That would be a very destructive signal to everyone [on] obligations and promises we made to them."

City roads approaching critical mass, transit board warns council

TURNING THE HIGH LEVEL BRIDGE'S streetcar trestle into two lanes of private vehicle traffic is just one of the ideas city council is looking at to alleviate Edmonton's rush hour woes.

As the city is forced to come to terms with the increasingly frustrating traffic situation drivers face every day, council members are likewise willing to entertain increasingly unorthodox ideas.

"It's getting to the point where we have to come up with new solutions," says Brice Stepehenson, the city's transportation planning manager. "The city is growing and no new capacity is being added."

Although Stephenson says that turning the High Level's streetcar line into a road would get 800 more cars into downtown in the mornings, it's probably not a viable solution, as the bridge currently isn't strong enough or wide enough to accomodate it.

And while other ideas, from widening existing bridges to building more, have also been considered, none have yet been approved by council.

"You always run into the problem of not having enough parking, enough roads, and it'll just come up again," says Christina Gray, chair of the Edmonton Transit System Advisory Board, a citizens' group that advises the city on transit issues.

Gray says that city should stop focusing on road capacity and start thinking more about improving the transit system.

"Transit should be the preferred mode, and then this wouldn't even be an issue."

However, Gray does say that council has recently been much more receptive to transit concerns than it has been traditionally, as it becomes more and more obvious that increasing road capacity is only a temporary solution.

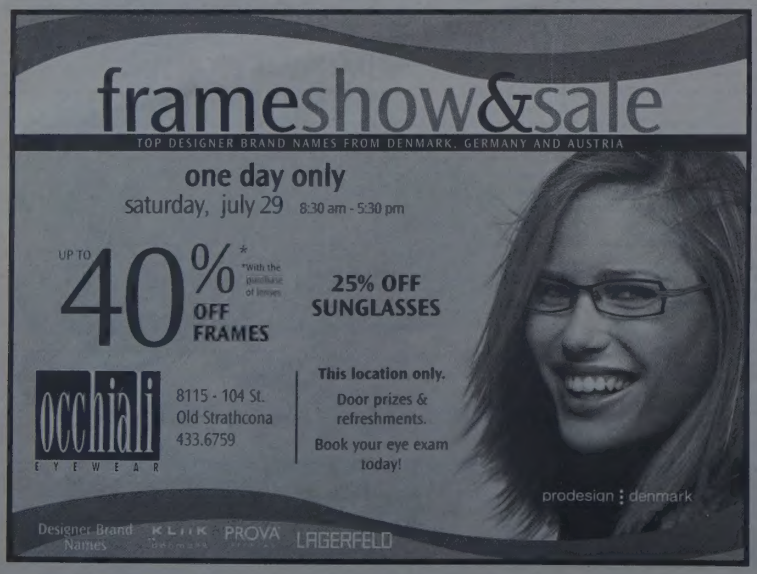
"There's more attention right now," she says.

A survey by Edmonton Transit last fall found that on an average weekday, the LRT carries about 42,000 passengers, while the rest of the system brings that number up to about 100,000, a number that pales in comparison to most other Canadian cities (Calgary, with a comparable population, carries around 230,000 on it's C-Train alone daily).

Despite the city's recent willingness to consider transit projects, Gray says more attention, and especially more money, is needed.

"An effective transit system has to be get people out of their cars, and I'd like to think it's becoming easier to do that," she says.

MATTHEW HALLIDAY



IN BRIEF

ACTIVE CITIZEN

GREEN YOUR GREEN

YOU CAN'T TELL HOW GREEN A LAWN IS JUST by looking at it. Sometimes the yards carpeted in greenest mono-cultured Kentucky blue grass are kept that way with a combination of environmentally un-friendly practices. If you can't take Mark Wells' earlier Active Citizen suggestion to "kill your lawn," you can take some steps to reduce your turf's environmental impact.

GRASS CYCLE

You know how much work it is to bag your grass clippings? Moving those bags from your alley or curbside takes energy too. Seasonally, grass can make up as much as 10 per cent of all municipal waste. Leaving your clippings in-situ naturally fertilizes your lawn and saves the truck fuel needed to haul bags of grass from your backyard to the co-composter. Just cut your lawn often enough so that no more than one-third of the grass blade is clipped per mowing (shorter clippings decompose better) and leave it.

HIGHER LOWER TECH

Nothing disturbs the summer peace like a two-stroke, gas powered lawn mower roaring to life. And if the noise isn't enough of an environmental impact for you, remember that anything that burns gasoline emits oxides of nitrogen, volatile organic compounds (smog precursors, and toxic pollutants in their own right), and greenhouse gases. Running a gas lawn mower for an hour emits as much smog-forming pollution as 40 new cars running for the same period—48 kilos of greenhouse gases in a season.

Electric mowers are marginally better for the neighbors trying to enjoy an evening on the back deck, but your lawn mowing emissions have only moved the mower exhaust to the coal-fired power plant.

The greenest of grass cutters are the modern versions of Edwin Budding's original 19th century reel push mower. With no air pollution and only a quiet whirring, both your neighbors and the atmosphere will be happier to see you become a pusher.

HERBICIDE REDUCTION

The North American aversion to the dandelion corresponds with the history of the lawn mower in North America. The plant brought to this continent for its nutritional food value and medicinal properties became a hated weed at the same time the lawn mower was introduced. Now the yellow flower is a chief target of chemical herbicide use. Private use of chemical herbicides is the main source of herbicides in contaminated rain water that washes down street storm drains and into the river.

Tolerating some weeds on your lawn, handpicking weeds, and keeping your lawn healthy so that the grass can out-compete the unwanted plants are all means to reduce the use of chemical herbicides.

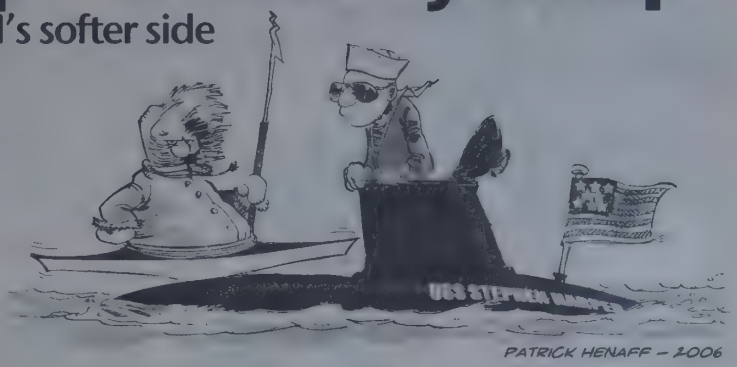
Is Stephen Harper a military wimp?

Military budget reveals the PM's softer side



PATRICK HENAFF – 2006

IN THE HEAT OF THE FEDERAL ELECTION campaign last December, Stephen Harper declared that protecting Canada's sovereignty was Ottawa's most important duty.

In surprisingly defiant language, Harper pledged that a Conservative government would not allow foreign vessels, including U.S. submarines, to enter Canadian Arctic waters without our permission. Harper pledged $3.5 billion to build three military icebreakers and a system of underwater sensors to detect unauthorized activities in our waters.

"You don't defend national sovereignty with flags, cheap election rhetoric and advertising campaigns," Harper said. "You need forces on the ground, ships in the sea and proper surveillance."

U.S. Ambassador David Wilkins attacked Harper's sovereignty plan, noting that Washington has never recognized Canada's claim to those waters. All this helped Harper shed his image as a pro-American water-carrier who'd be quick to cave in to the Bush administration.

What a difference six months—and some private time with the president—make. The Harper government has quietly shelved plans for military icebreakers and underwater sensors. Yankee subs can presumably glide into our waters without filling out a single Canadian application form. Without the sensors, we don't even know they're there.

LINDA MCQUAIG
COMMENT

The Canadian military is still getting lots of new money, but it will be spent on things that please, rather than annoy, the Bush administration—notably aircraft and helicopters that will allow Canada to contribute more effectively to the U.S. "war on terror."

Particularly pleasing to the Americans is a $3 billion contract for heavy-lift planes, awarded, without competition, to U.S. aerospace giant, Boeing. It's all part of Harper's plan to massively increase military spending, well beyond the substantial increases made by Paul Martin's Liberal government

Steve Staples, a defence analyst with the Ottawa-based Polaris Institute, says Harper's plan will raise military spending within five years to $21.5 billion a year—by far the highest level of Canadian military spending since World War II.

But that was during a world war that killed tens of millions of people. What's the threat today? Al Qaeda?

"How many tank divisions does Al Qaeda have?" asks Staples.

There's been a dramatic change in Ottawa's defence priorities. Supporting U.S. military ventures has apparently moved to the top, while defending Canadian Arctic sovereignty—something that will become more relevant with the melting of Arctic ice and the opening of a northern sea passage—seems to be mostly regarded as a pre-election teaser

And contributing to UN peacekeeping missions, long valued by Canadians, has been quietly abandoned as a defence priority. We've gone from being one of the world's leading contributors to UN missions to being an embarrassing laggard contributing fewer peacekeepers today than does tiny, poverty-stricken Burkina Faso

This momentous change reflects the priorities of the Bush administration, and Canada's defence lobby

But it's something the Canadian public would have had little sense of, listening to Harper on the campaign trail

"WE PROMISE YOU OLD-FASHIONED living with graciousness, warmth and affection. This entire community of half a million people are waiting for you and dedicated to ensuring that your entire visit is pleasant, memorable and unforgettable."
— A.J. Anderson, GM, Edmonton Exposition, circa 1971.

Yeah, that's exactly what I think of when K-Days comes up. Not sirens raping the air open as gangs of dinks in product-placing tank tops yell filth to impress the girls they'll soon fuck pregnant and skip town on. Oh, and puke. Viva la corndog!

One of my favourite flashbacks is my grandmother standing on a street corner downtown, dressed as a curly-haired parlour whore.

Her neon green saloon outfit gave her alien soul an otherwise impossible connection to the frontier history of this resource town—built on coal more than gold, ultimately reborn of oil. By celebrating regional history under this specific banner, Klondike Days helped immigrants like her join a unique city our generation would come to take for granted and finally not even notice blurring under armies of box stores, the same... everywhere.

Tweaked from former expositions going back to the sunset 1800s, K-Days showed up with a grin in 1962 and died at 44 years in a flurry of self-congratulating PR emails this year. The gold pan empty, it was still so far ahead we had the first real casino in the country. The parade and look of the event took over making a proper holiday.

But, heck, now you can be a retail consumer at the fair more than ever before thanks to Northwest Originals (not making this up!) and a huge "Tattoo" for any and all fat, red-faced, racist, shithead drunks in uniform! Huzzah!

Despite its slow, papable slide, with mankind's urges in general, into the sleazier, cheaper and just plain ugly, I still care enough about Klondike Days to hate this laughable, cool-for-five-minutes-about-12-years-ago rebranding to Capital EX. It's a ridiculous buzzword name. But really look at it, there's that pathetic Shelbyville vs. Springfield thing again, our sad grasping at world-class city-ness that ignores the fact most places bigger than us aren't better, but at least you can pay way more rent there. And only cool begets cool; worrying about cool gets you instant disqualification.

It's so bad, I'm surprised they didn't get Fred and Barney in shades to rap the theme song: "Hey, E-ville! Look at us! We da No. 1 capital, so get on da dino bus! Yeah. Yeah. It's your birfday."

To be fair, the name fits Edmonton's eternal struggle to matter most, at the specific and sadly hoped-for expense of Calgary. Capital EX is Now—an airy, global kind of brand, like X3 and Brangelina—the farthest thing from Robert Service poetry that used to awe campfire whisky-heads. I know.

It's tough to argue that The Shooting of Dan McGrew is more engaging than 12 hours of rocket-launcher, jet-pack GTA genocide. And when it comes down to it, Capital EX is just Klondike Days in a different outfit—a fake-titted, tattooed WWE Diva oiled down and barely covered in a schoolgirl getup, instead of an old lady dressed as a curly-haired parlour whore.

Still, Thursday at 21:00 we're dressing like prospectors and disappearing into the shrieking noise one last time.

Join us for corndogs?

Hey, E-ville! Look at us! We da No.1 capital, so get on da dino bus!

MEAT MISSILES

Watching TV, I couldn't understand why people were throwing meat on to a hockey rink at the beginning of the game. Then I remembered—it's provincial Pride for the Oilers' playoff success. But this was no NHL hockey game, it was a bunch of little kids playing hockey at a local arena. The whole meat on ice phenomenon has entered our communities. The huge chunk of red meat is an insult to all the people in Edmonton who cannot eat red meat everyday. Are we this arrogant? Oh people will say "oh it's just for fun, you're taking it too hard." Well, for the hungry and poor of Edmonton, it's a hard life to live. Let's throw them some red meat for a change.

Innocence vs. experience

Stereotype-shattering show among Capital EX art offerings

LEARNING...
THE VERY HEART OF OUR COMMUNITY
By Nina Haggerty Centre for the Arts artists & City Centre Education Project students; Through Jul 29, Part of Northwest Originals at Capital EX, Northlands Sportex
Info: www.northlands.com

THEY SHARE A PROFOUND RESPECT for the artistic practice, but another factor unites the Nina Haggerty Centre for the Arts and the City Centre Education Project. Both organizations, whose joint exhibition is part of Capital EX's art component, also have a commitment to busting stereotypes about their program participants.

In the case of the three-year old Nina Haggerty Centre, the fight is against the benign discrimination that plagues people with developmental disabilities.

"We make a distinction between us and our partner schools," explains Centre co-founder Wendy Hollo. "People tend to think of the developmentally disabled as perennially being 'children.' When you look at the art from the schools, these kids are assisted and are trying to produce something specific. What's amazing about art from our population is that you can really be blown away by a piece that makes you wonder where it comes from. Our artists aren't guided towards a certain outcome. We don't instruct them, we just facilitate the art-making process."

The Centre's lead artists are professionals with their own art practices who act as resources to the collective of developmentally disabled artists. The Centre's facilities and in-house Gallery are also factors in their collective's ability to create work that has a legitimate place in the city's arts community.

Though the City Centre Education Project (CCEP) is also interested in potentially helping its participants carve out an art career, its time frame is less immediate. CCEP treats art as a field just like any other potential grown-up job—one that takes dedication and skill. By valuing students' work, the students themselves also feel validated.

Heather Raymond, the Principal of Norwood School and a key figure in the CCEP collaboration with the Nina Haggerty Centre, points out that CCEP schools are located in the inner city, where self-esteem can be hard to come by. The outside perception of the "inner city kid" is almost universally negative.

"This is a good opportunity to change people's attitudes; to demonstrate that the inner city produces capable, intellectual, talented young people," Raymond contends.

The group exhibition at Cap EX features the work from their April annual joint show, also a fundraiser for activities and program upgrades. Many of the 160 pieces (half from each group) were sold, and hang with "on-loan from the collection of" tags, just as in any gallery or museum.

While Northlands can be incredibly naff (an organization that promises to "rock" the city throughout the year in its press material—language that either implies Kiss reunion concerts, equal parts walkers and pyrotechnics, or air strikes by bullish men of war), it's also interested in connecting with the city's arts and culture community.

This means art from the Centre and the CCEP hangs alongside work presented by the Art Gallery of Alberta.

"It's amazing for kids to go to a show at a real gallery space and see pieces of their work valued, to go from making a piece of art, to learning to frame and hang it for sale," notes Raymond

MUSKWA By Kelsey Campbell, age 13, student at Parkdale School

Hollo adds that reaching a massive audience is thrilling. "We want people to understand what we do and that we're always welcoming new artists and have room for more people. We also want to blow open myths. When they look at people with developmental disabilities, too often people see the shortfalls but not what they can contribute. Art is a great leveling place, and disabled artists are just as likely to produce intriguing work as any other artist."

SKETCHES

■ It's the "leaving season." Arty types flocked to the Black Dog last Thursday to say goodbye to Latitude 53's gal-of-all-trades, Laura Kozak, who filled the niches of program coordinator, publicist, and opening reception finger food-maker at the Gallery. Kozak is headed to the West Coast, where hopefully she'll remember us fondly and be a bridge between our art communities.

As for Latitude, it soldiers on. Head honcho Todd Janes recently finished an interview for the CBC Radio One program, SOCKET (www.cbc.ca/socket). It airs Saturday, July 22 at 4:05 pm.

■ Painter/drawer Tony Baker is also set to depart, leaving a vacant space at ArtsHab as well as in our hearts at summer's end, as he follows g-pal/New World muse Sarah McCallum to Toronto. Consistently prolific and lacking the ego that usually hangs around other star artists like the smell of gesso, Baker's visual wit will be missed.

■ If you love Robert Bateman and Tom Cochrane, have we got a mural for you! The Night Of Artists crew put together a huge mosaic painting that has panels from over 120 artists, including the aforementioned Bateman and Canadian rocker Cochrane. Earth's Treasure Chest, a cornucopia of wildlife art, is on display at Cap EX and online at muralmosaic.com. It will tour Canada before being auctioned off in panels to raise funds for CPAWS, the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society.

Strange successes

Stewart unforgettable in Lemoine mystery

EVELYN STRANGE
Written and directed by Stewart Lemoine, Teatro La Quindicina, Starring Ron Pederson, Jeff Haslam, Davina Stewart, Shannon Blanchet, Until 29, Tue – Fri 8 pm, Sat 2 pm & 8 pm, Varscona Theatre, Tickets. $18, $15.00 Students/ Seniors/Equity, Pay What You Can Tue evening/Sat matinee, 433-3399 (Voice box #1) or 420-1757 / www.txonthesquare.ca

EVELYN STRANGE IS TOO, TOO DAVINA. The performance of Davina Stewart as passionate Westchester wife Nina Ferrer is a divine mingling of the Hepburns. Clad in vintage couturier ensembles, she evokes the elegance of Audrey, whilst performing with the gutsy passion of Kate. The performance is the beating heart of Teatro La Quindicina's season closer at the Varscona.

The Lemoine script is a delicious Hitchcockian intrigue which twists its labyrinthine way from the rarified air of a box at The Met to the egalitarian embrace of a New York Automat. A mysterious blonde (Shannon Blanchet), suffering a severe case of amnesia, wafts portentously into the aforementioned opera box and meets Perry Spangler (Ron Pederson), copy editor, with whom she watches Richard Wagner's epic Siegfried.

Perry comes to realize something's not quite right with his unexpected date, and being a chivalrous soul, helps her, leading to a whole tangle of issues, not least being the nosiness of Lewis Hake (Jeff Haslam), company ladies man and all-round charmer.

Larded with Lemoine's trademark pithiness, Evelyn Strange begins acerbically enough, with Nina ruminating on the nature of Wagner and the effect of his operas upon the unwary, hovers hilariously around Evelyn's wide-eyed incomprehension, before taking an unexpectedly dark but compassionate turn down the murky alleyways of the human heart. The climax of the show is undeniably wrenching and, in the best Hitchcock tradition, horrific as the shards of Evelyn's life are inexorably drawn together in a shattering moment of recollection.

It's the kind of script that demands precision from director and cast, as well as steely control. Lemoine exacts both from the quartet performing this mystery—the elements of style are all there: "gee whiz" charm, wasp-ish ennui, psychic disconnection, manly suffering, and high comedy. But they're played with such fluidity that the substance triumphs over the style. The unfolding of the human drama behind the mystery is the riveting aspect of this story, and each cast member evinces a commitment to the motivation behind Lemoine's fabulous turns of phrase rather than the words themselves.

If Stewart is the heart of this show, Jeff Haslam is its breath. His work as Lewis Hake ranks among some of his best. There's more than a whiff of Clark Gable here, and yet the roguish urbanity, which Haslam wields so deftly, cracks, exposing poignant vulnerability.

It's a pleasure to watch Ron Pederson as well—each performance with Teatro over the past few years shows a lovely maturation as the undeniable comedic talent expands and incorporates a humanistic empathy. Pederson brings a beautiful, unaffected sweetness to the harried Perry and an undeniably warm presence to the show.

Blanchett is an absolutely spot-on, deadpan heroine. She has an intuitive sense of comic timing, coupled with formidable dramatic chops. Her journey from forgetfulness to awareness is an affecting blend of seriousness, joy, despair, and terror.

High for Thai

Our reviewer just wants one more bite

BAN THAI
15726-100 Ave., ★★★★☆

HEROIN ADDICTS OFTEN TALK ABOUT "chasing the dragon." Apparently, they never seem to get the same high that they did the first time they tried it, and every subsequent hit is an attempt to relive that original rapture. Hence the expression, which means they're hounding after some phantom notion that doesn't exist. I think I'm chasing the dragon with Thai food.

Without a doubt, my first taste of Pad Thai while sitting in the middle of a street just off Koh San Road in Bangkok, with seemingly suicidal motorbike and tuk-tuk traffic buzzing by, was nothing short of euphoric. A sidewalk vendor had set up a wok over a propane burner and was serving Pad Thai to hungry Thais and tourists seated in red plastic lawn chairs (out in the middle of the road). At first I was a little skeptical, but after a few bites of the thick rice noodles in tamarind with chilies, garlic and lime; you couldn't have moved me out of that seat without a Mac truck. Seriously, I was hooked.

When we made it back to Canada, I went into reverse culture shock and craved Pad Thai hourly. Even now, years later, I still get a little, well, I wouldn't call it junk-sick, but...

And the other night, a hankering struck, so we headed out to Ban Thai on the west side for what is reportedly some of the more authentic Thai food in the city. As we decided what to order, Nona and I sucked on Singhas (Thai Beer) while the kids plowed their way through guava and mango juice. In the meantime, we had salad rolls (shrimp, fresh basil, lettuce, carrot, and rice noodles wrapped in, uh, rice noodles. Not too bad, but they came with some sweet gooey chili sauce instead of peanut sauce for dipping), and deep-fried spring rolls.

After some hemming and hawing (and pondering the fuchsia and blue rattan/bamboo décor), we chose Gai Yang (half-chicken, marinated in garlic, cilantro and coconut milk—charbroiled and pieced, $14); Kao Mun (Thai rice steamed in coconut milk, $4), sea bass filets steamed in banana leaves with coconut milk, lemon grass and curry (can't remember what the hell it's called in Thai, but it was $15); and of course, Pad Thai (thin rice noodles fried with minced pork, baby shrimp, tofu, chives, egg, and bean sprouts, topped with crushed roasted peanuts, $13)

The chicken, although a little dry and overcooked, was quite good. It reminded me of the chicken we used to get from a Thai lady in a Bangkok alleyway, who roasted birds over open coals in a barrel, while other birds pecked around at her feet. (Quite macabre really, but tasty.) The fish was likewise fine with a strong flavor of lemon grass (which is kind of reminiscent of Pine Sol and may not be to everyone's liking), but lacked a green curry punch that I was expecting.

Sadly, the Pad Thai was a bit of a disappointment. Authentic Pad Thai in my mind is made with large flat rice noodles (about the size of a lasagna noodle), and has pronounced garlic, lime and peanut flavours with a touch of heat (i.e. chilies) to keep it interesting. These noodles were thin (which is pretty much the norm here, and I don't really expect anything else), with a strong bitter taste that could have been the result of too much tamarind, but was more likely from burnt oil. They generally lacked any real tang

Thai food is all about balancing opposing flavours, some of which are hot while others are salty or sweet, but all of them can be overpowering, whereas Thai dishes are delicate and subtle. So, attaining the proper balance is a real art form. The fish dish managed to walk that fine line, but the Pad Thai kind of crossed it.

Don't get me wrong, we had a fine meal and it was fairly authentic in terms of how it tasted, but it definitely wasn't worth the nearly $100 our bill came to. My fear is that I've romanticized an ideal of Thai food that doesn't really exist (much in the same way it always seems to be summer when I think about my childhood). Just like a junkie though, I know I'll keep chasing.

Where: Half a block away from Padmanadi (10626-97 St.) where I just ate.

Hair: I get it done by Scott at Fuss (10529-81 Ave., 434-0990). I've been going to him for over a year, following him to each salon he works at. He's great. Even my mom and my sister go to him now.

Style: "I'm not sure how I would describe my look. I just know all the rednecks I work with think I'm weird because I try to dress nice. I make good money: why not spend more?"

Wearing: One night I was in West Ed with my workmates shooting BB guns at Wild West Shooting Centre, and later bought this jacket. Admittedly it was a drunken purchase. It's Diesel from Urban. Jeans are Ernest Sewn from High Grade downtown. He's the designer for Paper Denim & Cloth. As soon as I touched them I knew they were his. My shirt is Modern Amusement from Holt Renfrew. It just has great detailing. My worn out belt is Prada from Henry Singer. It's in rough shape because I wear it every day. I bought these slip-on Tsubo's from Gravity Pope. I refuse to buy shoes that have laces. I've gone hiking in the backcountry of Jasper in them and they're still holding up. Best pair of shoes I've ever owned. I guess I should try to wear black socks with them, I just don't own any.

Into: I like video games, but I won't tell you which ones. I'm into science, and not into religion. My favorite band is the Ramones and I'll name-drop local bands—the Knee Jerks and the Blame-its. They're kind of embarrassing, so I won't name any of my favorite movies—they're all romantic comedies. Instead I'll list Cosmos, the TV series by Carl Sagan and Spaceballs (1987). Books I enjoy are: the Pale Blue Dot, also by Carl Sagan, On the Road by Jack Kerouac, and Napoleon's Buttons: How 17 Molecules Changed History.

Not Into: If you're on television I probably won't like you.

Betcha the room smells like patchouli, too...

That '70s show

Roberts sings a Chemical past, rocks future

SAM ROBERTS
W/ The Trews, The Novaks, Thu, Jul 27, Capital EX Ed Fest, Northlands Park (7300-116 Ave.), 6 pm, $25

"GOD, I WISH IT WAS THE '70S ALMOST every day of my life," says Sam Roberts only half-jokingly.

On a short break before heading back on the road, Roberts is happy to talk about Chemical City, a record which sounds so much like a summation of that maligned decade that it ought to be retroactively fit into the soundtrack for Dazed and Confused.

"You hear about the managers and the roadies and the record executives themselves—nobody was a stodgy businessman—hell, the A & R guy had to party harder then the band to maintain his 'cred.'

"Those were the days... I miss—well, I don't miss it because I wasn't there—but I've read so many books about it, I slip into this dreamlike state imagining that I was living back then."

Make no mistake—this isn't about longing for the polyester-tinged world of Almost Famous; what Roberts is referring to is an era in which bands were actively supported while they learned their craft by major labels that actually balanced economics with artistic freedom.

"It was a sort of more carefree time where you were allowed to make mistakes," he explains. "You were actually allowed to go out on a limb and risk something. But now, when you do that—and you should never have to hold yourself back from doing that—you make one mistake and next thing you know, 'Boom...'"

ROCKIN' SOUL

The Montreal native fights the old fight, what WKRP's Herb Tarlek called "The Dungarees versus The Suits"—which is kind of sad when you think about it, since that battle is all over but the shouting.

Even more appalling, the dungarees won and then proceeded to morph into their ideological opposites, the effect of which was a generation's worth of Top 40 rock music squeezed of any heart or soul.

So a guy like Roberts comes along, still working and writing within the mainstream—or at least what used to be the mainstream—but his mindset is that of the underground

At 32, he's too young to remember rock as a monolithic populist music, something that binds an entire age group, but he instinctively aligns himself that way, imparting equal significance to, say, Sloan as he might Thin Lizzy.

"We're part of the same tradition," he insists, "from Chuck Berry to the Stones and Pink Floyd to The Smiths. Here we are adding our voice to it, because you need your personality to come out—that's where the fight starts, but also where the greatest satisfaction lies."

There you go: Roberts just wants to bring back a little of that glorious swaggering Stones feeling to the radio.

It's not such a terrible thing—the New York Dolls and the Replacements made the same attempt, and they never had to lose their protective hipster coloration—but Roberts has to approach it from the other angle: that of major label hit-maker working to find freedom within the constricted parameters of the system.

Roberts understands the precariousness of the situation, having done the indie route before, and he certainly has sympathy for musicians who choose to opt out of the game altogether

CHEMICAL BALANCE

"Well, what is that a reaction to? Why is there a high price put on this? The freedom to write what you want to write and perform how you want to perform has become a precious commodity now," he muses.

That's because, as Roberts is acutely aware, the label judges its artists on units sold, not critical accolades, and Roberts has already proven himself as a hit-maker. This makes for a hard time when you want to mess around with the formula, as Roberts is attempting to do with Chemical City.

"It's one thing that's still prized by a great deal of musicians and yet not so much by the money men—I don't think that they feel they can be so idealistic.

"[Musicians] are sometimes so fiercely protective that they exclude a lot of people who could otherwise have access to this music, and it could mean something to them. It's become a bi-polar existence when it comes to what path you go down. If you can straddle both worlds, you're one of the few."

That's exactly where Roberts is now, with dual indie cred and commercial radio support—every album from Brother Down on has had its share of hits, and Chemical City is no different with a Canadian number one spot for "The Gate."

"You can fall off at any time, though," he quickly notes. "When I put this record out I really didn't know what would happen. Nothing is guaranteed—no matter what success you've had in the past."

Best of the fest?

ED FEST
Jul 20 - 29, Northlands Park (7300-116 Ave.), Rain or shine; Complete info and line-up: www.capitalex.ca, Single passes $25, Three-day packages $60

THEY'VE PACKED THE ED FEST GROUNDS WITH music for every night of the exhibition, including a number of local bands that have stardom—blessed stardom!—within their reach. Rockers Our Mercury (July 29) have the chance to win over some of A Simple Plan's (July 29) crowd, and Murder City Sparrows (July 23) should have little trouble wresting attention away from Hedley. Rock 'n' roll is a cutthroat business, boys—kick ass and make sure to leave lots of witnesses.

She's really, really big now with the release of her newest album, Loose, so count your blessings that Nelly Furtado (July 20) is even playing our little festival. Be sure to add your voice to wholesome family favorite sing-alongs like "Promiscuous" and "Maneater"!

You can't yell "Freeee-bird!" or "Sweet Home Alabama!" at Roger Hodgson, Formerly of Supertramp, (July 20 at 9:00)—you've got to pester him with requests for "The Logical Song" or "Bloody Well Right." Go on—you know he likes it when we do that, just as he probably really likes it when "formerly of Supertramp" is forever appended to his name. Crime of the century!

MURDER CITY SPARROWS

Trooper (July 29), Streetheart (July 27—and I refuse to call them Kenny Shields & Streetheart), and Gino Vannelli (July 23) complete the quartet of gasping '70s rockers at the Telus Stage. Won't somebody show them some love? For old times' sake?

Frankly, though, it's the Epcor Stage (4 and 6:30 pm) that has my attention. Granted, I'd throw over every single musical act at this festival for 10 straight days of Christine Hurley: Clairvoyant (July 25), but this is where they fit the up and coming folk-country bands like Lost Highway (July 26), The Fates (July 28), and Big Mike Callan (July 23), who better be really tall and/or fat or I'm demanding an investigation. A whole lotta Heart

Don't you want the Secretaries to care about you?

THE SECRETARIES
Sat, Jul 22, Blue Chair Café (9624-76 Ave.), 8:30 pm, Info: 989-2861 or www.bluechair.ca, By [illegible]

LESS COCK, MORE ROCK.

Where did the awesome rocker divas go? The Pat Benetars, Lita Fords, Wendy O. Williams-es, Chrissie Hyndes, Patti Smiths, even the Carol Popes seem to have vanished under the Sketchers-footed talons of Madonna's daughters as they clawed their way to the top of the pop heap.

Women who can tap into the spectacle and—dare we say it?—balls of rock 'n' roll without compromising their maturity, femininity, or intelligence are in short supply these days.

In killer leather boots, a trio of Edmonton ladies is bravely stepping into that gap. The Secretaries—bassist Colleen Brown, guitar belle Amy van Keeken, and drummer Natasha Fryzuk—are looking towards their '70s foremothers as they shape their aural identity.

Specifically, the Wilson sisters.

"When we got together about a year ago, half the time was just spent talking about music," Brown recalls. "Heart was inevitably in there. We all love their music, and it's natural to emulate—or rather, to have it seep through—if you listen to something."

Thus the Secretaries have a love of arena-filling sound and riffage, as well as strong, harmonic vocals and operatic levels of emotion. Too smart and comfortable in their skins to be cowed by the boys' game of rock excess, but grounded in the homemade, handbuilt ethos of the Bust generation, the Secretaries are as squarely pegged as Helium-era Mary Timony.

"Seventies Heart is definitely a strong element, and we really dig that sound," reasons Fryzuk. "I don't know if I'd call us completely garage, a little Black Keys sort-of thing maybe, but as we go on that element is less and less. We really like The Darkness."

She's not just talking about the music. Fryzuk concedes an admiration—shared by her bandmates—for the more sartorial over-the-top-ness of the glam-metal group.

"The jumpsuits, yeah," Fryzuk swoons. "There's this leather jeweler at North Country that we would want to make us wacky jumpsuits."

"When we have more money, we'll do more. Like wear feathered head-dresses." van Keeken sighs, "For now we make do."

That means accessorizing their sonic palette with adorable get-ups and some serious booty-shaking that will scale up as the band evolves.

> "There's this leather jeweler at North Country that we would want to make us wacky jumpsuits."
> NATASHA FRYZUK

Brown states, "It's really important for all of us to have fun. The thing is, we're trying to do rock music, and if you're not having fun doing that, there's no point.

"What we really like about our performance is that it is a show," van Keeken agrees. "There are elements of theatre, and we want to be really tight, and don't want people to get bored. Whenever we're playing or talking between songs it's a performance, or at least we aim for it to be.

"Not only are we playing for 45 minutes non-stop, but it's also coherent, and we've spent time figuring out where the breaks are. And of course we have little outfits."

No Secretaries show is complete without some mid-set ass wiggling. The gals have perfected the imperfect dance move and ply it at every show.

"A lot of crappy booty shaking to, like, Notorious B.I.G or some girl doing Xanadu," laughs Fryzuk. "We're serious, but you know... if we catch ourselves being pretentious we trip ourselves up."

Those kinds of dichotomies hold their charm: the laid-back mindset of the humble beginning balanced by the openness to boundless ambition, the big-ass '70s with the indie, the purposefulness and craft against the jokiness.

Fryzuk gives a lyrical example. "Rockers always have these cool songs about drinking bourbon. We wanted to make one up too, but with the most retarded liquor we could think of."

The winning drink?

"Cointreau."

What's that shaking? Ann Wilson, Cointreau, and the Secretaries' collective booty.

A heady mix, indeed.

MSTRKRFT hooks with The Looks

MSTRKRFT
W/ The Juan McLean (DJ set), Lazaro Casanova, Wed, Jul 26, Starlite Room (10030-102 St.), 9 pm, $14

IN TIME, MSTRKRFT'S GROOVE-BASED, electro concoctions may become just as popular as the propulsive punk one half of the duo makes with Death From Above 1979.

"The dance floor is the great democracy," enthuses Jesse Keeler, who says making music as MSTRKRFT—a heavy dose of house and breakbeat with a shiny '80s varnish—isn't much different than making the sound of DFA 1979. "It's just an extension of our general ethic of writing songs and making music—kinda fun, kinda aggressive. Y'know, three people got shot in our neighborhood last week. Living like this, you get into accepting a lot of stuff and I think it comes across in the music."

Until recently, the duo was mostly known in the underground scene for its mind-blowing reconstructions and re-interpretations of popular singles—from Wolfmother to Metric to Bloc Party—and for operating with an almost scientific formula of thought. To them, the art of remixing has become a real passion.

"It serves sort-of a double purpose. We want the remix to find them new fans on the dance floor, yet keep it recognizable as theirs." Keeler also admits that "saving" songs can be part of the process. "Sometimes it has a bad vocal that we just drop or sometimes you like the song and then it just goes the wrong way."

REMIX

PROSPER PRODANIUK

But not all can be saved. "We turned down this AFI one. I thought, 'How am I gonna fix this?' It's a song that even a DJ can't save.."

MSTRKRFT's much-anticipated original debut, The Looks, was released on July 18 on Last Gang Records, and as the conversation moves into much nerdier territory—on tangents ranging from Larry Levan's DJ techniques to visiting New York legend Arthur Baker—a major burr regarding the album's reception digs deep.

"[The Looks] isn't an album," sighs Keeler. "It's a collection of dance tracks. Somebody that DJs or reviews dance music sees it all the time, but it's hard for somebody that doesn't to understand that. We're not into making something for home listening, we want to make something that's going to make the crowd go crazy."

And as dance snobs become less afraid of pop hooks, and labels like Kompakt, Get Physical, and Kitsune are climbing to the top of dance charts with audiences in popular and underground dance circles—Montreal's Tiga releasing his own debut, Sexor, to worldwide acclaim earlier this year—Toronto's own dukes of the dance floor are poised to rock the globe as well.

BEATS AND PIECES

■ Finding high quality fusions of electronics and jazz can be a daunting task but Kyoto Jazz Massive's 10th Anniversary double disc retrospective (Compost, ★★★★½) shines. Collaborations and solo projects are all part of the package, as are remixes from Quantic and the house heaven of Blaze and Masters At Work.

■ Speaking of house, don't forget to check out two of the smoothest operators on the West Coast scene at The Bank (107 St. & Jasper Ave.) on Thu, July 20—Californians Miguel Migs and Kaskade. With new recordings on Salted Music and Om respectively, Migs will rock an outdoor stage until midnight while Kaskade takes over inside afterwards. Tickets are only $20 in advance to see two legends of their craft on the same night.

FOR THE RECORD Stony Plain Records' Holger Petersen presents Corb Lund and the Hurtin' Albertans with two gold records last week at the Sidetrack Café.

FRANÇOIS MARCHAND THE FM DIAL

MOVING UPSTREAM

THE ROBOTS WERE SITTING AROUND THE campfire, roasting marshmallows. One of them burned his metal fingers and scampered into the woods, the other stuffed himself so full of sugar he passed out in a convulsive daze, and the last got a nasty cold that went from bad to worse. And the night settled in

It's a nice little metaphor for what's happening to Field & Stream (and, to a certain extent, what they sound like). After months of prep work and songwriting, tumultuous line-up changes, and let-downs of all stripes, the Edmonton space-folk outfit was finally getting set to release an EP when the situation took an even shorper turn

"I got mono and I was in and out of emergency rooms for the better part of a month," says front man Nickelas Johnson, still groggy and weak. "It was pretty ugly. I've just gotten back on my feet in the last two weeks. I've been out shooting hoops and stuff—which I'm terrible at—but it's enough exercise that I can carry an amp into a room."

While Field & Stream's upcoming Sidetrack gig (this Sat, Jul 22) will be the first since Johnson got ill, the release of a recording has been pushed back until mid-September at the earliest, but might just allow Johnson and Co. to churn out a full-length. With a few tour dates along the way, it'll be a nice way to see if the band can recover from the sickness and unease that's been surrounding them over the past months. They know expectations are still running high.

"It's more important to me that it sounds right," says Johnson of the current rehearsal/recording process. "I don't want to set a release date and disappoint.

"It's been close to two years of collecting more and more people who are getting 'disappointed'"

THE BUZZ

INTRO BUZZ STOP CALGARY'S CHAD VAN Gaalen and NYC's Supersystem will rule new releases in August. Stop. Holding thoughts and peeing pants. Aaaaah.

Oh, hey Dix. What's up?

"My buzz band of the week is local punk act RadioForHelp. This five-piece of 20-somethings kicked mad ass at 'Strip Down' this year," enthuses PunkTV.ca's Dixon Christie. "Their wild stage presence and pro attitude is a strong juxtaposition to the fact that they have been playing for just two years. The band got word via email that they had won a spot on the Ernie Ball Stage at this year's Warped Tour

"When questioned on what the opportunity meant to the band, Erickson had this to say, 'I think that it's a great opportunity to take us to next level, to get our name out there. Also, it's kind of a prestige thing, once you have played the Warped Tour; that gives you some credibility in the industry. I love centre stage, and I cannot wait. But it's going to be a little intimidating playing with the caliber of bands that we are playing with—we'll do our best!'"

Kick-ass.

A KLEIN FAREWELL

WITH HIGH HOPES AND A TEARFUL EYE WE BID farewell to local music promotion stalwart Eli Klein. Currently doing a wicked job for Union Events, the former Black Dot/all-ages scene luminary will be headed to Toronto in the fall to pursue a career with Six Shooter Records.

All is not lost, however, as Klein has promised to set up one helluva goodbye party before everything is said and done. Stay tuned for more details.

Good luck, bro. We'll miss ya.

DEEP ROUTES
CAM HAYDEN

D/FW AT BOW

THE DALLAS/FORT WORTH BLUES SCENE IS A bit of an enigma. From the very earliest days of Blind Lemon Jefferson and T-Bone Walker—and on through Freddie King and Stevie Ray Vaughan—the cream of the crop had to leave town to make an impression.

A native of Fort Worth Texas and proponent of the D/FW scene, Andrew "Jr. Boy" Jones brings his own brand of Texas blues to the Blues on Whyte through Saturday night (July 22).

Jones, who has been playing professionally for 40 years, came to the attention of the great Freddie King while still in high school. The year was 1966 and by the time Jones was 17 he was playing full time in the band, being tutored by King on guitar and in the blues, and meeting the likes of B.B. King, Bobby "Blue" Bland, and Clarence Carter on the Texas/Oklahoma/Louisiana blues circuit.

He eventually ended up in California and began working with Tony Coleman and Russell Jackson in a trio they called Silent Partners. The trio backed Katie Webster for the Alligator release Swamp Boogie Queen and worked with a number of other Alligator artists. He also recorded with Frankie Lee and Sonny Rhodes, and did some work with Charlie Musselwhite.

Since that time, Jones has struck out on his own, releasing two albums on Bullseye and one, Mr. Domestic, on his own Galexc record label. A prolific writer, Jones penned all the tunes on the 2002 release, taking inspiration from "my wife, life and everyday life. 'These Bills' is a true to life story that everybody knows. I was just dreading going out to the mailbox one day because I knew it would be full of bills."

Over 40 years in the blues biz has given Jones an arsenal of stylistic approaches to the blues: Texas shuffles, slow ballads, and boogies all find their way into the mix, and that should make for a great week at the Blues on Whyte.

SASQUATCH TIME

LOCAL MUSIC ENTREPRENEUR JOHN Armstrong is back with another Sasquatch Festival, running July 28 to 30. This year the event return to the Easyford site, located about 90 minutes southwest of Edmonton. A weekend gathering of like minded music fans, the Sasquatch Festival includes a pot luck dinner, two evenings and days of music, dance with Mile Zero and—new this year—a SOCAN songwriters circle. Confirmed acts include AA Sound System, Bill Bourne, John Spearn, Radiovocana, The Fates, The Fabulous Bee Feeders, and the Kevin Cook Trio. Tickets—$40 in advance—cover your music and camping for the weekend and are available through Blackbyrd Myoozik. More info on this peaceful, communal musical gathering can be found at www.brassmonkeyproductions.com.

AUSTIN LEGEND ON DVD

IT WAS IN THE SPRING OF 1989 THAT YOUR humble correspondent first met Clifford Antone, the owner of Antone's Nightclub and Antone's Records in Austin, Texas.

At the time I thought he was an enterprising man who had made good. As time progressed I learned that he was much more than that. He was a tireless promoter of the blues; the man who resurrected the careers of many Chicago players who had fallen on hard times in the '70s. Not only that, but he made sure they received the medical attention, respect, and the pay they had so often been denied, even when that came out of his own pocket.

He also promoted such youngsters as Kim Wilson, Jimmie and Stevie Ray Vaughan, Angela Strehli, Lou Ann Barton, and through his club gave these "kids" the opportunity to work with the likes of Eddie Taylor, Hubert Sumlin, Sunnyland Slim, Buddy Guy, Pinetop Perkins, Albert Collins, and Albert King.

Clifford passed away on May 25 at the age of 56, and within hours the Austin music community, along with music fans and musicians he had known around the world, were in mourning.

A documentary that premiered at the 2004 SXSW Film Festival titled Antone's Home of the Blues, has now been released in Canada on Koch. With performance footage and interviews covering close to 30 years of Antone's history it is an homage to this humble blues fan who always wanted the music to speak, to touch, and to make people's lives better.

I shed another tear for Clifford while watching this disc.

Highly recommended.

Game? Set. Match!

Dan Bern and Colin Priestner an odd-couple musical duo

DAN BERN
W/ Colin Priestner, Tue, Jul 25, Sidetrack Café (10238-104 Street), 9 pm, Info: 421-1326, $18

HOW DID THEY END UP BECOMING friends?

It's a legitimate question to ask; history has churned out its fair share of odd couples in its day, and when it comes to the tennis-playing, song-singing friendship of Dan Bern and Colin Priestner, there's nothing normal about it.

Sure, popular folk artist Bern and local musician Priestner might share a few common threads—like chatting on the phone about movies, playing a match or two of tennis (Priestner once had an NCAA scholarship), or singing about politics—but personality-wise, they are two of the most different people to ever cross paths.

For the soft-spoken and reserved Bern, being buddy-buddy with Priestner meant recently organizing a rendezvous in New Mexico. There, they delved into their most prized pastimes, and even though there's about a 20-year age difference separating the two, both Bern and Priestner found themselves connecting in a way that not all musicians do.

"It was really fun," Bern explains over the phone. "I was working with one of the local tennis players there, and when Colin came, he brought a lot of expertise and energy. He was like a visiting tennis dignitary.

"We ate well, played a lot of tennis, and played a lot of music. He knows all of my songs, so he was teaching me some of my old songs, the ones I'd forgotten. I got to hear some of his [songs], too."

Bern may be quiet and shy, but on his upcoming album, Breathe, set to be released mid-September, there's a lot to be said. Religion is just one of the themes brought up, yet unlike some of his previous works (like My Country II, which openly criticizes the Bush administration), there's a different tone to Breathe that Bern says is a result of his taking a break from touring to focus on other aspects of his life.

Like all passionate musicians, though, Bern's back on the road, this time with a friend in mind. Bern requested that Priestner open for him in Edmonton, not because he feels obligated to mentor the young, ambitious singer-songwriter, but because Priestner is, in his eyes, a great performer and musician

"I know him, and I want to give him every chance to play," Bern says. "I don't know if I've necessarily taken him under my wing. I mean, he's flying pretty well himself. We've become friends outside of anything; we connect in several ways musically, and with tennis, and with the general outlook of things. He's just a good guy. A very talented guy."

Priestner, on the other hand, might disagree with that last statement. According to the outgoing U of A political science student, "talented" would be someone like Bern, not some kid who rushed to release an EP entitled Blatant Hypocrite without putting in much effort last year. However, like Bern, the 22-year-old Priestner is also on the brink of releasing his next album, a 13-track collection of topical references to Nike, Van Gogh, and Jesus, that he hopes is more mature and comprehensive than his EP was

"I had no idea what I was doing at the time [of Blatant Hypocrite]," Priestner laughs. "I had just started writing songs, and I've kind-of grown to hate that record. It's just too poppy, overproduced, and it didn't match my sound live.

"I don't have a nice voice or anything, so I'm never going to wow anybody with melodies. Because I'm a singer with a more raspy voice, I need to be saying something. If you're not saying something and you don't say it well, you have to sing well; you need something else to bring people in."

Priestner is definitely more open about his album and future than Bern is, but when it comes to talking about his upcoming show, the butterflies in his stomach are nonetheless evident

From Priestner's perspective, he's not just opening for a friend and tennis-buddy; rather, he's opening for his favourite musician in front of hundreds of people, a situation he's not yet used to, despite all of the other oddities between them.

"It's going to be pretty nerve-wracking," Priestner says. "On the one hand, you're opening for your idol. On the other hand, it's going to be the first time I'll play for a jam-packed crowd, which is also a tailor-made audience.

"Obviously, my favorite singer is Dan Bern, so anyone who likes him will recognize his influence in my music. There could be four hundred potential new fans for me here in Edmonton."

Supergroup goes super loud

El Terran turn off the past, turn up the volume

EL TERRAN
W/ SNIC (CD release), Thu, Jul 20, Filthy McNasty's (10511-82 Ave.), Info. 432-5224, Free

SUPERGROUPS ARE ALWAYS AWESOME, especially when they're on the local level.

Edmonton's latest, El Terran, is no exception—forged from members of 7B0 notables Hundred Acre Wood, Veil Maker, and the stars.wept.

El Terran's sound is as diverse as the groups it has pulled its talent from. Self-described as "loud ambient rock music with some jazz, surf and heavier influences," and anchored by Katie Perman's distinct vocals, El Terran draws from almost every musical scene.

"There's a lot of different influences, and people," says lead guitarist Geoff Hawryluk. Different is an understatement; after attending a Whitehouse show in Toronto earlier this year, Hawryluk was so inspired by the controlled and abrasive chaos emanating from the stage that he immediately deciphered a way to apply those concepts to basic rock music.

"What we're doing now doesn't sound like anything we've done before," enthuses Hawryluk. "Our main influences seem to be grindcore, jazz, and surf music. It's just loud; we have some melodies, and we kind of wanted to make them as loud as possible."

Loud is right; El Terran's guitarists manipulate their tones by running their instruments through samplers, enabling them to layer sounds upon other layers of sound later on, creating a thick, cacophonous wall of noise which surrounds otherwise beautiful melodies.

"When I had the music in mind, the only thing I could envision being heard was screaming, but that was the last thing I wanted," Hawryluk says, emphasizing his band's unprecedented racket. "The difficulty is getting it to the point where the music is loud and abrasive, but enjoyable. Because of the volume, our first show was the first time any of us had really heard Katie sing."

Needless to say, El Terran displays every sign of quickly becoming a sonic force on Edmonton's indie scene. They are the perfect mix of innovation, diversity, commitment, and—perhaps most importantly—they've cranked it up to 11.

Supergroup, indeed.

The awful Truth

Or: How to tell Ridley to get Bent

THE BOTTLE AND TRUTH TOUR
W/ Ridley Bent, Dustin Bentall, and Cameron Latimer, Fri, Jul 14, Sidetrack Café

REVIEW

IT TAKES COURAGE TO GET UP THERE AND sing under the lights, so there's always tragedy when it goes so wrong. Encouraged by Dustin (son of Barney) Bentall's Bobby Bare Jr. voice and lyrical depth on disc, it was anthropology time via the "Bottle and Truth" singer-songwriter three-pack.

Well, things went OK at first—Cameron Latimer's compositions are a little squeaky clean, still, throwing in "Streets of Baltimore," a favourite of John Gulick around here, and a Wilco cover to be timely, can't be a bad idea.

But "Jesus, Don't Cry"? Relatively, it's a seriously boring tune and, at that point, the crack-cocaine Hoegaardens and an evil writer friend all began to reveal what a hyper-square night surrounded us

Bentall did the best—his song about a dead "she" (actually a car) has great, minor-key jangling, and his voice is full of promise at only 23.

But once rural funkster Ridley Bent came on... Well, I'm just relying on my notes from now on, to be truly honest.

To quote the napkin scribbles: David Wilcox Chili Peppers: (/Statler: "I can think of a place I'd rather be." Waldorf: "Where's that?" Statler: "Burning in hell."/Blueshammer licks, quasi-rap lyrics like "possessed by the soul of Bruce Lee—the Chinese connection" as if Eminem never existed./I'm sure he's a nice guy, but on the other hand I'd eat his heart for one dollar to stop this./Once again, funk without actual soul—I don't buy this shit.

You get the idea.

Not one of the Sidetrack's better nights.

But the Dead City Serpents with The Get Down at the punk Econolodge the next night erased all pain and memory, especially once the headliners turned on their own instruments, Who-style. That's how to fucking rock.

LULLABY BAXTER
Garden Cities of To-morrow
(Boompa)

LIKE A LESS COKE-ADDLED, MORE PRECIOUS Carly Simon on a shoestring budget (though with many, many helping hands), Montreal-based Lullaby Baxter makes laid back, folky, orchestral quirk-pop for the Belle and Sebastian set, rooted in the hippie hangover of the '70s as well as the kind of '60s chanteuses who would share stages/body fluids with Serge Gainsbourg.

Garden Cities is the likeable, crushed-velvet piped Baxter-and-friends' follow-up to their 2000 debut, Capable Egg, which was received with the kind of salivating press that sealed Feist's critical fate and fanbase.

It's essentially indie adult-contemporary—sentimental, sunny, and mostly unobtrusive. Lazily drifting melodies carry Baxter's off-kilter lyrics, some charming ("you loved me like a circus") and some cloying ("the world is my potato"). It's worth noting that a couple tunes are plump with "Praise Jesus"-iness, which may or may not be ironic.

Nevertheless, if you enjoy a particular brand of jazz-twee, this is a lovely album from an interesting leftfielder, and the bookends—the first and last tracks—are stunning.

CARLA BOZULICH
Evangelista
(Constellation)

CARLA BOZULICH IS BACK AT THE CREATION of gospel-folksque-hybrid-noise stuff, firmly re-enforced by her completely identifiable demonic wail.

She effortlessly drifts in and out of two worlds with this record. One is the world most often associated with Constellation Records—a world of poor, disheveled and depressed experimental musicians—the other, a world closer to, say, Bloodshot Records, one made up of of poor, disheveled, and depressed country musicians

Amidst this cross-pollination of styles, the outcome is a swirling, chaotic, and confrontational record, which will prove to be one of the heaviest—lyrically and musically—of the year. Even Bozulich's cover of Low's epic "Pissing" succeeds where cover songs on LPs rarely do: her version merely develops her personal voice and vision as well as any of the originals on Evangelista.

This proves that Bozulich can apply her talent to almost anything, be it a genre or a song, and still come out shining and excellent

PAUL WELLER
Catch-Flame! Live at the Alexandra Palace

WELLER'S CAREER HAS BEEN A LONG AND winding one (largely unnoticed on this side of the Atlantic), and Catch-Flame!, recorded in London this past December, is a fitting showcase of the mature songwriting abilities he's developed.

Perhaps best compared to John Mayer and his Trio's recent live effort Try!, this album represents a musical makeover of sorts, debuting new material and touching on old favourites, all delivered in a live, tonight-only setting (and with the requisite exclamation point to boot)

The similarities aren't merely academic, either: like Mayer, Weller taps into much bluesier, rootsier sources for his newer material—a far cry from his punk-rock days as a member of The Jam. However, his past influences still manage to peek through at times ("From the Floorboards Up" and "Come On/Let's Go").

Himself influential, Weller also seems to draw from compatriot crooners such as David Bowie ("Savages") and The Who ("In the Crowd," which makes several nods to the crashing finale of "Baba O'Riley"). That being said, the main influence is clearly guitar-driven blues-rock, steeped in the American South but refined in the British tradition

GHOST HOUSE
Departures
(Ghost House Music)

WHEN I WAS YOUNGER, MY MOM ALWAYS told me my eyes were bigger than my belly I'd fill my dinner plate with the most turkey, cabbage rolls and cake, and surprisingly enough, I would never finish everything Each little scrumptious bit of nourishment would never get my full attention; the prodding and poking I delivered would only be enough to turn my food into a mushy concoction.

And so you may ask: how does this little childhood flashback relate to Ghost House's Departures?

Ghost House is your Vancouver-based garage-band version of Broken Social Scene, its members oscillating from their own individual projects to side-projects to the band itself. Although the album boasts a unique chaotic and melodic blend of brisk vocals streaked with raw, energetic instrumentals, there's just something missing.

Like my inability to judge just how much food to serve myself, Ghost House might just have the same problem. They don't know when too many musical endeavors are enough. We'll give them time, though; they have potential, and it'll take a little bit of overeating for them to realize it

EAGLES OF DEATH METAL
Death by Sexy
(Downtown)

SCORE ANOTHER FOR FALSETTO IN ITS LONG bitter rivalry with Underbite for primacy as the top technique for male vocals

Death by Sexy can be understood as nothing less than a clear, unambiguous representation of what a man can accomplish when he sings high

Vocalist Jesse Hughes shows good stuff here, including his dedicated line to the soul of The Cramps' Lux Interior on "Chase the Devil," but without a doubt, his ass-shaking-est, panty-peeling-est work is done at the high end of his range, which is where he spends most of this album's time

Add all the extra shimmykokobop that Josh Homme (that's "Man," in French) is worth, and dude, everyone's so busy reaching for drinks, joints, and groins that it's like the chinwaggers never even existed

Someone with a really loud stereo should get this album, drive down to Whyte Avenue, and blast "I Like to Move in the Night." It'll be better than an Axe commercial, dude—I am so confident about that.

DAYS IN THE LIFE
TOM MURRAY

Thursday: Ronnie Hawkins, Still Alive and Kickin' DVD, Real to Reel.

Considering the crappy packaging, this is actually a pretty decent documentary of the notoriously irascible rockabilly/country singer's life. Centred on his battle with cancer, the movie follows the Arkansas bad boy (but long time Canadian resident) as he meets with doctors, television crews, and old friends, berates wife Wanda over spending money for smokes, and generally acts like an overgrown adolescent. The interviews (with ex-sidemen, including The Band's Robbie Robertson) are standard issue reminiscences, but the fun is all on the sidelines, as Hawkins wanders around grumpily cussing and/or flirting with middle-aged women, or in strange details like the Hawkins' many small dogs, all dressed up in sweaters for a day out.

Friday: James Keelaghan, A Few Simple Verses, Jericho Beach Music.

Beautifully arranged and played Irish-folk music, ranging from traditional ("Bonnie Light Horseman," "Jack Haggerty," "The Boston Burglar") to more recent (and intelligently chosen) singer-songwriter offerings (Ewan MacColl's "Sweet Thames Flow Softly," Dan Somer's "Harvest Train"), all flowing together as a piece.

Saturday: Johnny Dowd, Cruel Words, Bongo Beat.

The fifth album from this chronicler of the down and out, the hopeless and the emotionally wounded doesn't deviate much from its predecessors in misery—the protagonists in "Praise God" and "Poverty House," victims of an indifferent community and failed marriage respectively, are given little chance of wrestling their dilemmas down. That's honest reporting on the part of Dowd, friends. And while it's slightly unnerving, especially run up against sleazy blues, jazz, country and surf music, it's also riveting and unforgettable.

Sunday: Johnny Cash, Live in Denmark 1971 DVD, CMV/Columbia.

You'd be justified in being suspicious, considering the amount of lame Cash merchandise dumped on the public over the past little while, but this one is actually kind-of worthwhile, if only for the novelty of seeing Cash attempt to read Danish from a crumpled piece of paper.

The performances are decent—Cash is in good, if slightly bemused, form—plus guests Carl Perkins (who was part of the Cash road-show at the time) and the Statler Brothers get guest shots on "Blue Suede Shoes/Matchbox" and "Bed of Roses/Flowers on the Wall," respectively

Monday: Lenine, Lenine, Six Degrees.

The Brazilian man of the moment. Like Juana Molina, he runs bossa nova, electro-samba and rock together, but not in the same airy, distracted way; instead, he heads for metallic-funk stomps ("Alzira e a Torre"), lazy hip-hop ("Tubi Tupy"), and fractured rhythms ("Sonhei")

Tuesday: John Holt, I Can't Get You Off My Mind, Heartbeat

Early Studio One Holt, lilting rocksteady rhythms with the singer's sweet tenor floating over top. It's easy-listening reggae, really, and aimed in a business-like way for the charts and potential crossover—covers include "My Sweet Lord" and "Holly Holy"—but still fine for all that.

Wednesday: Matthew Sweet, Girlfriend, Epic/Legacy.

Reissue of a classic '90s album and one that Sweet was never able to top, despite years of trying to replicate the formula of pop tunes layered with Crazy Horse guitars and pop culture references.

It's nice to have the record spiffed up with brand spanking new packaging, but the hook here is a second disc of acoustic demos and live cuts—including "Divine Intervention," "Girlfriend," "Looking at the Sun"—very much worth the extra cash layout

42. Cure what you've been jonesin' for

Kevin Smith Can't Stop Himself

The director breaks a vow, keeps a promise, makes Clerks II

BY MATTHEW HALLIDAY

QUICK FACTS

- Kevin actually worked at the New Jeresy convenience store and video shop where he shot the original Clerks.
- To finance the movie, he maxed out his credit cards and sold his comic book colelction (he bought it back later).
- He shot a pictorial of his own wife, Jennifer Schwalbach, for Playboy.
- He attended Vancouver Film School but dropped out.
- Wrote a screenplay for a film version of The Green Hornet, which Harvey Weinstein of Miramax wanted him to direct, but he backed out, claiming he couldn't do justice to a big-budget action movie.
- Did rewrites for Coyote Ugly.
- His favourite bands include: The Police, The Talking Heads, Run DMC, Public Enemy, Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band, The Cure.
- Was hired to write the script for Superman Lives, which was rejected and re-written by Tim Burton.

Kevin Smith's fans can thank (or blame, depending on which fans you ask) the creators of a certain Canadian teen melodrama for the fact that Clerks II is finally seeing the light of day.

"When I first heard that they were going to do Degrassi: The Next Generation, I thought why would you want to do that?," says Smith. "Don't go back to the well, man. Leave Degrassi alone. I wasn't vocal about it, but internally I thought, 'Man, what a mistake.'"

A longtime fan of the Degrassi shows ("even Kids of Degrassi Street had its merits") and a five-time guest star on the The Next Generation, which he calls "sublime television," Smith's skepticism abated when he finally saw the new show.

"They went back to the well, sure, but they drew fresh water. No, fuck water, they drew milk chocolate, man. It boosted my confidence, like they went back and expanded the universe, and improved it. And I thought maybe I could pull off a Clerks II."

When it was announced, the long-rumoured, much debated sequel to his universally beloved, ultra low-budget 1994 slacker comedy Clerks was instantly the target of harsh criticism from some fans, who said he was just cashing in on the popularity of the first film, and that he had nothing original left to say.

"I have hardcore fans and hardcore detractors, and they're very vocal about it," says Smith. "The original film engenders a fierce loyalty, and that's because I think I'm perceived as one of that generation that made it good. So there's a sense of ownership, and also a sense of 'we put you where you are.'"

Of course, they sort of did. After a less-than-encouraging theatrical run, Clerks found its real audience on home video. The film, which followed one long, eventful day in the life of convenience store register jockeys Dante Hicks and Randal Graves, won the heart of every underemployed wage slave who saw these two smart, funny guys who seemed consigned to a life of making change and taking orders

"These characters are the closest to my personality that I've ever written," says Smith "They were really just me split down the middle. We were part of this generation that didn't want to be like our parents' generation, which was the one that got out of school, got a job, climbed the ladder, and didn't say things like, 'Well, I don't feel fulfilled at this job.' You weren't supposed to be fulfilled by your work. But my generation said 'Well, we'll play this shitty game, but by our own rules, so I'll work some crap job until my ship comes in.' But the ship don't come in for everybody, and the idea of peeking in on them years later was really interesting. Because if Clerks hadn't taken off like it did, I'd be these guys. I'd be nowhere. I got very, very, very lucky."

Why now?

No film needs a sequel, Smith says, "except for Star Wars, where you had to find out what happened to Han Solo," but he always found himself wondering what happened to Dante and Randal after he'd left them cleaning up and closing down the Quik-Stop for another day at the end of the original film

So in spite of all the jokes about bestiality and outlandish sexual fetishes (and if you want to see a Kevin Smith movie without those, go rent Jersey Girl and you'll see why it's not such a good idea), Clerks II really is an earnest attempt to figure out where the characters had ended up, and it's also Smith's attempt to bring his own little filmic universe full circle.

Bringing back Randal and Dante, not to mention perennial burnouts Jay and Silent Bob, the dope-dealing odd couple who linger in the background of almost every Smith film, just seemed to be the right thing to do

But the Internet doubters weren't the only skeptics. Jeff Anderson, who plays Randal, the wise-cracking "nihilist dreamer," who Smith says is his favourite character, didn't want anything to do with it at first, thinking it was a bad idea to revisit a movie that people loved so much, for fear of screwing it up. It didn't help that he had long had mixed feelings about playing Randal, or as Smith explains it, "like how Leonard Nimoy had a problem being Spock, until he finally came to peace with it later in life."

"He had a real up-and-down relationship with it... After the movie took off, people would ask, 'What're you doing next?', and he would just say, 'I don't know, whatever.' He's not an actor professionally, you know, and he just got real tired of it and thought to himself, 'I would never have to answer this question if it hadn't been for that fucking movie.'"

But to hear Smith tell it, Anderson was invaluable when they were putting together the new film

"He became my sounding board, where I would go to him and talk to him after cutting every scene, because if I could turn him around, I could turn people in the audience around too."

Doing the sequel was also part of a promise that he'd made to Jason Mewes, who plays Jay, that he could do the character one more time if he cleaned up his long-standing drug addiction

"Heroin, ocycontin, crack, he stole from me, all the terrible things you hear about drug addicts," says Smith. "But he's been clean more than three years now, so this movie is partly me reward to him.

30,000 of my closest friends

Smith was one of the only directors to get in on the ground floor in the first days of the Internet boom, and he spends, by his own admission, way too much time online most days, posting on the message board at the website of his production company, View Askew, (www.viewaskew.com), or on his own blog, My Boring Ass Life (www.silentbobspeaks.com)

In doing so, he's kept up an intimacy with his fans that most filmmakers, even cult filmmakers, can't hope to match (hell, the guy says that since discovering MySpace three months ago, he's already approved more than 30,000 friends)

But that closeness is a mixed blessing, given how many people feel free to log on and make personal attacks against Smith, his colleagues, even his family

"I've had people question the parentage of my kid," he says. "People know I'll respond personally so they say any crazy thing."

The Internet fan base also called him on his change of heart when he announced the sequel, reminding him that after 2001's Jay and Silent Bob Strike Back, he'd said he was done with his old characters

But as he says, Strike Back was made in lieu of Clerks II, and he's glad today that he didn't make this film five years ago

"If I had done this in '99 it wouldn't resemble this one at all. This was really informed my life between 30 and 35, so thank god I didn't do it back then. If the first movie was my life in my 20s, this is my 30s. It made sense to explore them through the same characters."

And, he says, nobody was feeling any pressure to better the original film either.

"Oh God no, we weren't like, 'Let's bury the original.' I don't need anyone to say this movie is genius. I just need them to be like, 'Ah, you didn't fuck it up.'"

THE MOOBY REPORT

STOCK UP
Clerks (1994)

Every film nerd worth his Cassavetes collection knows how Smith made his debut feature by maxing out all his credit cards, how the cost of the soundtrack ($27,000) outweighed the cost of production ($26,800), and how the film was actually shot in the same store Smith worked at the time. Okay, so the cinematography was non-existent and the supporting actors were at a sub-public access TV level, but I defy you not to laugh with this film, again and again and again.

STOCK DOWN
Mallrats (1995)

The dialogue was funny but not as funny, the borderline-incompetent cinematography now looked like a bad TV show instead of a charming bit of amateur cinéma vérité. But it had its moments, and it was saved by Jason Lee's effin' awesome turn as Brodie Bruce.

STOCK WAY UP
Chasing Amy (1997)

The best. Great performances and great writing, from the doomed attraction between Ben Affleck and Joey Lauren Adams to the homo-erotic subtext between Affleck and Jason Lee (really).

STOCK MAINTAINS
Dogma (1999)

It was flawed, but it was Smith's most ambitious film yet, a very brave and very funny satire of religious hypocrisy and corporate greed. And it brought George Carlin to the attention of a whole new generation. Bravo, Mr. Smith.

STOCK DOWN
Clerks Cartoon (2000)

Kind of early to be running out of ideas, eh? It didn't last very long, and it wasn't very funny.

STOCK UP SLIGHTLY
Jay and Silent Bob Strike Back (2001)

Okay, so it's a little (a little?) self-referential, but Smith did promise this would be the last hurrah for his mainstay stoners Jay and Silent Bob, and the whole thing is a surreal trip through the Smith universe. But you know, move on man...

STOCK WAY DOWN
Jersey Girl (2004)

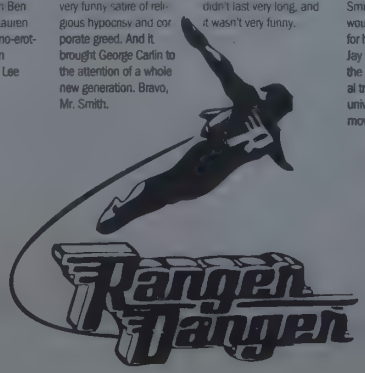
Something's happening here, but you don't know what it is, do you, Mr. Smith? A trite, maudlin pile of gooey sentiment that would embarrass even Rob Reiner.

DOWN FURTHER
Degrassi: The Next Generation (2005)

Last year, Smith guest-starred in five episodes of Degrassi. Kevin, your obsession with bad Canadian teen drama is endearing, but really, c'mon. There's a rumour floating around that Smith will direct a feature film based on the series.

QUESTION MARK?
Clerks 2 (2006)

Can Smith's return to his first triumph herald an artistic rebirth, or will it just be a failed attempt at recapturing past glories? Only time, and box-office receipts, will tell.



Kevin Smith started his career as the great white hope of American indie cinema. His romantic, misty-eyed look at suburbia and the lovable misfits who populate it endeared him to a generation of slackers, stoners, and nerds. So if he started out as the Gold Standard of indie film, where's his stock at now?

A FAVOURITE TRUISM OF FRENCH FILM critics is the idea of the "genius of the system," namely the creative boost to a filmmakers' work resulting from the limitations imposed by a studio (or a regime). A lack of money, a strict deadline for completion, script interference at every turn, or, as in the case of, for example, Orson Welles, complete loss of artistic control in the editing room: in their eyes, these become virtues, allowing the true auteur to tap into a rich and deep vein of creativity lying otherwise dormant beneath the surface, if only in a last ditch effort to preserve, as much as possible, the original vision of the film in the final product.

There's something untenably naïve about the idea that outside interference always promotes great art—no one is likely to argue in all seriousness that the last minute butcher job on The Magnificent Ambersons preserved its integrity or made it a better film, or that the avant-garde must be regulated, or that masterpieces only spring from constant bureaucratic supervision—at least there's something to be said for the stimulating power of the limitations necessitated by a strict adherence to the linear narrative form. To paraphrase George Stevens, no stranger himself to micro-management, under these circumstances a director can experiment with some interesting arty bits as long as he doesn't get too carried away.

It might be difficult to persuade someone like Elim Klimov, a Soviet director who spent most of his career at odds with his superiors in the Politburo, of the merits of this argument. Nevertheless, a retrospective of his films reveals how the need to conform to certain propagandistic standards and narrative tropes pushed him to new levels of formal experimentation in search of a way to transmit his message, pro-state or not.

Come and See (1985) is a harrowing story of a young boy's loss of innocence set against the backdrop of the Russian partisans' campaign against the Nazi invasion of Byelorussia in 1943. Perhaps Klimov's best known work, it provides a particularly refined example of his penchant for manipulating sound and found footage to produce shock effects.

Caught in the middle of a mortar attack, Florya (Alexei Kravchenko), an inexperienced member of the Byelorussian guerrilla force, goes deaf, signified by a combination of a flat tone, eerie subterranean scratchings on double bass, a murky echo of distant voices and noises throughout the forest in which he has hidden, and sounds of Florya's heartbeat and rattled breathing ratcheted up to an almost unbearable level on the soundtrack.

When Florya has been driven mad with grief at the loss of his family and lover, he shoots at a picture of Hitler lying in a muddy pool of water, as though to take direct revenge upon the true author of his suffering and reclaim his lost childhood. As the sound of the rifle fire rings out, Klimov inserts footage of Hitler's rise to power culled from films like Leni Riefenstahl's Triumph of the Will, yet he runs it backwards: with each of Florya's increasingly erratic shots, a little more of the past is undone. Finally, Klimov holds on a still image of the baby Hitler sitting on his mother's lap, while Florya finds that he is incapable of blasting away the innocence in the child's eyes.

The subtlety and relative ambiguity of the idea that Hitler began life as an innocent babe, and that children, whether of communist or fascist parentage, deserve the opportunity to really be children, was difficult for Soviet authorities to comprehend and accept. They were even less open to what they saw as the sympathetic portrayal of Tsar Nicholas II in Klimov's Rasputin biopic Agonia (made in 1975 but not released until 1984).

Ironically, Agonia is likely the pinnacle of Klimov's achievements as a Soviet-style artist. What appears to be yet another Mosfilm/Sergei Bondarchuk costume-drama spectacular, with all the bourgeois western decadence of Sam Spiegel's Nicholas and Alexandra (1971), is, in fact, haunted by nightmares of Russian constructivism in the form of judiciously placed clip montages culled from period newsreels, and films like Strike and October, which demonstrate just how badly Russia fared under the last of the Romanovs.

Ironically, Klimov may have fared badly under communist rule because he was the very opposite of the intellectual filmmaker or decadent formalist so reviled by the Stalinists and their descendants. This is editing with, in true Eisensteinian fashion, a visceral impact, and it's hard not to take the spectacle of Nicholas and the Nazis grinding the peasants' faces in the dust as a body blow to the gut.

CONVENIENT LOVE
Clerks are back at work

Deep-fried comedy

Heavily battered Clerks II tastes slightly better

CLERKS II
Directed by Kevin Smith, Starring Brian O'Halloran, Rosario Dawson, Opens Fri, Jul 20, ★★★☆☆

FANS OF DVD EXTRAS MAY ALREADY know that Kevin Smith shot an ending for his cult favourite Clerks in which an armed robber enters the Quick Stop convenience store in Leonardo, New Jersey and sprays the brains of foul-mouthed hard-luck clerk Dante Hicks (Brian O'Halloran) all over the counter.

Luckily for Clerks fans, he dropped the ending and spared Dante's life. Offing the main character would pretty much have snuffed any sequel products.

And for those of us who aren't Clerks fans, and I do mean us, it means Smith has a chance to make a movie that's somewhat better than the original.

Sure, he sacrifices some of the shoestring charm of the original—found setting, borderline amateur performances, bit parts doled out to friends and family—but the bigger budget and 12 years of filmmaking experience result in a funnier, less tedious—though certainly not less vulgar—movie. Smith's track record since his debut is not such that he's set the bar very high, but if you have the stomach for it, Clerks II holds more laughs than the last three Kevin Smith movies combined.

Twelve years after the original, the Quick Stop has burned down and perennial counter staff Dante Hicks and Randal Graves (Jeff Anderson) find themselves employed by a chain fast food joint called Mooby's alongside lovely and unnaturally tolerant manager Becky (Rosario Dawson) and quasi-retarded Christian nerd Elias (Trevor Fehrmann).

Today, as it turns out, is Dante's last day on the job. He's engaged to Emma (Jennifer Schwalbach), a blonde, svelte ex-cheerleader type who wouldn't give him the time of day in high school, but has the rest of his life planned out for him.

They're moving to Florida to live the house her parents will buy for them, and Dante will go to work at her dad's car wash. Perennial burnouts Jay (Jason Mewes) and Silent Bob (Smith) are stationed outside selling weed, but an arrest and court-mandated stint in rehab have won their souls for the Lord.

As the day wears on, though, Dante's plans unravel as his feelings for his manager surface and the coarse, customer-hating Randal contributes the usual chaos to Dante's life.

Proceedings are enlivened by a trip to the go-kart track, some celebrity cameos, the discovery that the ultra-jaded Randal is not as hip to what constitutes a racial slur as he should be, a dance number complete with a parking lot crane shot, and some interspecies erotica performed live in the restaurant.

The dialogue not dedicated to advancing the plot, such as it is, devolves to vigorous discussions of sex acts and even more vigorous dissing of organized religion and pop culture phenomena like Lord of the Rings.

It all culminates in an ultra-talky emotional climax in a jail cell and a denouement that cleverly brings the franchise full circle.

Many of Smith's, shall we say, idiosyncrasies are in evidence—his inability to write plausible female characters (which is largely offset by the winning Rosario Dawson in the sympathetic/fantasy female role, and by limiting the number of female characters to two), his penchant for in-jokes (mostly reserved for references to the previous movie), and his inability to get serious without getting seriously goopy.

On the plus side, Clerks II is way more visually fun than the original, which fuels a forward momentum some of his earlier work lacks, and the juvenile vulgarity is so unflagging that if it doesn't chase you out the theatre door, it ultimately beats you into submission until, punch-drunk, you laugh at every dick/pussy/donkey joke despite yourself.

Wilson's identity crisis

Dupree doesn't know what it wants to be

YOU, ME AND DUPREE
Directed by Anthony and Joe Russo, Starring Owen Wilson, Matt Dillon, Kate Hudson, Michael Douglas, Seth Rogen, Now Playing, ★★☆☆☆

AFTER BUILDING A CAREER PROVIDING solid support to the likes of Jackie Chan, Ben Stiller, and Eddie Murphy, Owen Wilson gets more time up front with You, Me and Dupree.

After playing second fiddle in Starsky & Hutch and Shanghai Noon, and his star turn in Wedding Crashers, Wilson certainly knows how to make his screen time memorable, and it's guaranteed that his Dupree is the character you'll most remember.

Unfortunately, first-time screenwriter Mike LaSieur builds his temple to Wilson's laid-back surfer cool on a shaky foundation. It's a damn shame, considering the presence of Kate Hudson, Matt Dillon, and Michael Douglas in the supporting cast, and that directors Anthony and Joe Russo have such a strong pedigree from their work on TV's Arrested Development.

The filmmakers hobble Dupree from the start with their indecision over the movie's tone.

Although marketed by Universal as a laugh-out-loud comedy about a hapless slacker, there is a surprisingly tense undercurrent throughout, heightened by the fact that we hardly meet happy couple Carl and Molly (Dillon and Hudson) before they marry.

It is therefore hard to consider them as anything but elements in a screenwriting exercise, sketched with the barest essentials.

He's a driven architect, she's an inner city teacher, and her father (Douglas) just happens to be his boss. Not only does he horn in on Carl's big project, he'd also really appreciate it if he got a vasectomy.

Oh, and Daddy'd also really appreciate it if Carl hyphenated his name, rather than putting his little girl through the whole name-change thing. Are your sides splitting yet?

In this environment, Wilson's now-clichéd nudity and slapstick as Dupree are almost a relief. But it's all in the wrong movie, as is Hudson with her B.A. thesis on how to conjure a likable performance out of thin air. So the stars of Crashers and Crash, crash.

And to think it all coulda been saved with a flashback or two and a beefed-up role for Seth Rogen's Neil, a man hopelessly whipped by his unseen wife.

That's the movie I wanna see from the Arrested Development guys.

capsule film reviews

Clerks II Reviewed on p. 30

Click Adam Sandler's most toned down and sincere comedy to date. The first half is a fluffy romp, as Sandler fools around with a magical remote that gives him the power to control his life fools around with the pause, mute, and fast forward options in order to get out of irritating situations. The second half delves into more serious territory, with the central metaphor allowing room for plenty of Adam Sandler's trademark good-hearted-slacker routine. ★★★★☆ (EV)

The Devil Wears Prada Only marginally faithful to the ook. The Devil Wears Prada is the tale of Andy Sachs (Anne Hathaway), an unfashionable, aspiring "journalist" who, though unqualified, is hired y editor Miranda Priestly (Meryl Streep). What started as a searing roman a clef ends as a harmless it of Hollywood fluff, an elaborate excuse to see Hathaway scramble around New York City in gorgeously designed outfits that take precedence over character development. The moral of the movie is supposed to be "hold on to your integrity or become a vapid drone." It's no spoiler to say that Andy eventually finds a way to free herself; the movie, however, never does. ★★☆☆☆ (EV)

Garfield 2: A Tale of Two Kitties I'm going to climb out on a long limb here with this shocker: the Garfield sequel sucks. In the vernacular of stripey himself, it's a cat-tastrophe It's completely sub-purr. It's bad (FG)

An Inconvenient Truth Al Gore has been walking off the sting of George Bush's election theft by switching to the Jeremiah mode caught in David Guggenheim's documentary An Inconvenient Truth, which follows the former vice-president as he traverses the planet to talk about global warming and its consequences on the environment. His mission—and it very much seems like a mission—takes him from American towns to European and Asian cities, pounding his message out through sheer endurance and stubbornness. ★★★☆☆ (TM)

The Lake House Keanu Reeves amiably portrays the baffled architect Alex Wyler, who finds refuge from his immensely succesful father in a house by a lake, where a note leads him to contact former tenant Sandra Bullock. It soon transpires that Alex lives two years in her past, or maybe Kate (Bullock) lives two years in his future. But what perfect romance doesn't seem unbelievable in hindsight? The Lake House is competent, enjoyable and a pleasant reminder that true love need not be bound by space or time. ★★★★☆ (LL)

Little Man Reviewed on p. 39.

Mission: Impossible III Tom Cruise's tough guy is in constant conflict with the entire world, attempting to stare down the opposition before exploding in an exaggerated display of childish violence. MI:3 is a drama in which action masks the limited presence of plausibility, charm, and eloquence in a surprisingly entertaining romp about good guys stopping a bad guy for some reason or other, a drama not so shallow as to seem entirely devoid of depth, yet light enough to be useful on one of those rainy summer evenings. ★★★☆☆ (LL)

Nacho Libre Failed catch phrases, odd characters, bad slapstick. Jack Black's humour is wholly underutilized as his character spends most of the movie mugging awkwardly at the camera while speaking stiltedly in a bad Mexican accent. Nacho Libre seems to have been planned as sort of a spiritual successor to director Jared Hess' first film, Napoleon Dynamite, but Nacho just feels like an attempt to recapture the magic with weaker material. ★★☆☆☆ (JE)

The Omen Following the plot of the original Omen with minor changes to accommodate current events, the 2006 remake spends less time exploring the devil-child topic than it does on special effects. The film's strengths lie—as they did with the original—with the veterans performers As for the updates, the seemingly endless repetition of the number of the Beast and its predictable connection to the release date is silly, and the attempt to present recent events as supernatural despite their completely natural origins is nonsensical. You're better off tracking down the original at the local video shack. ★★☆☆☆ (LL)

Peaceful Warrior College gymnast (Scott Mechlowicz) feels like he's losing his focus but meets, a snowy-haired mystic character (Nick Nolte). What follows is predictable: Guru suggests a number of seemingly pointless and inane tasks that are trash-talked by the pupil until he breaks down and actually does them, finding that he's learning hidden wisdom—while the guru spouts go-get-'em mantras so vague as to be meaningless. Only Mechlowicz's performance, combined with some interesting character development and gymnastic sequences, saves the movie from being utterly predictable slush. But only barely. ★★☆☆☆ (EV)

Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest The next installment of Disney's based-on-a-theme-park freebooter flick is only half a story—you get the rest in 2007—and it's only two thirds as good as the original film. Jack (Johnny Depp), Elizabeth (Keira Knightley), and Will (Orlando Bloom) try to outwit each other and the supernatural again... but only Davy Jones (Bill Nighy) seems the list bit interesting. The rest is passable action/comedy, but adds no lustre to the first film's highly successful, middle of the road booty. ★★★☆☆ (KW)

A Prairie Home Companion A Prairie Home Companion is much closer to being "classic" Altman than something like Gosford Park, even if in the end it never really goes anywhere in particular. Standouts include Meryl Streep as a ditzy fading country star, Woody Harrelson and John C. Reilly as the flatulent and irreverent singing duo of Dusty and Lefty (who, incidentally, deliver Keillor's song "Bad Jokes" with suitable panache), and Tom Keith, the real sound effects guy from the show. The much heralded appearance of Lindsay Lohan is a bit of a letdown, though. ★★★☆☆ (CN)

Poseidon Wolfgang Petersen's remake of the disaster classic features foolish special effects and little suspense. Petersen's old self appears fleetingly, but mostly Poseidon feels like the last 10 minutes of Air Force One, over and over again. The actors are mostly C-list. Kurt Russell is the ensemble's anchor, let's put it that way. Of the film's other characters, the less said the better. ★☆☆☆☆ (JW)

A Scanner Darkly Richard Linklater's rotoscope-animated adaptation of Philip K. Dick's classic sci-fi novel is one of the most faithful adaptations of Dick's work ever to hit theatres. Featuring excellent performances by Woody Harrelson, Robert Downey Jr. and, gasp, even Keanu Reeves, Scanner is a hallucinatory trip into the mind of an increasingly spaced out junkie (Reeves), addicted to the powerful Substance D. The hook is that Reeves isn't just an addict, but a narcotics agent as well, spying on his friends and even on himself as he falls deeper into addiction, all under the watch of a frighteningly believable near-future police state. ★★★★☆ (MH)

Superman Returns The effects are influenced by The Matrix, Brandon Routh's boyish charm and charisma suggest an earlier era without aping it. Superman's quest for truth, justice and the American way has taken a back seat to his love for Lois Lane (Kate Bosworth), as Supes discovers that Earth don't need him anymore. The result is ok, but considering the myriad of roads that could have been taken in the mythology, the new trilogy's first entry plays it distressingly soapy and safe. ★★★☆☆ (MH)

United 93 A hard film to watch, with none of the firm resolve you expect from a Hollywood movie. There's no respite, and it's all very painful to watch, from the first few scenes of the 9/11 hijackers preparing in their hotel rooms for the flight that will fail to reach its target, to the final few minutes of crying and yelling, Barry Ackroyd's shaky hand held camera catching a blur of arms and feet desperately racing towards the cockpit to wrest control as the plane plummets inexorably to the ground. ★★★★☆ (TM)

X-Men: The Last Stand Sadly, probably the weakest of the three X-Men films in that most difficult to pin down way: simply being boring, subtly collapsing under its own tendrils, and boasting terrible dialogue. There's a big CGI fight here, but you know it's all going to come down to Wolverine and Phoenix, so even a couple prominent characters dying just feels like filler. ★★★☆☆ (FG)

LITTLE MAN
Directed by Keenen Ivory Wayans,
Starring Marlon Wayans, Shawn Wayans,
Now playing, jkkkk

THERE ARE TIMES IN MY LIFE AS A MOVIE critic when I feel like I'm propagating a great wrong by even mentioning a movie. . such as the Wayans brothers' newest "comedy," Little Man.

Marlon Wayans plays (thanks to the wondrous magic of CGI) a two and a half foot tall jewel thief named Calvin "Baby Face" Sims who pretends to be a baby in order to steal back a $100,000 diamond he's dropped into the purse of executive Vanessa Edwards (Kerry Washington) while evading the police.

Edwards and her husband Darryl (Shawn Wayans) are talking about starting a family, which gives Sims partner Percy P (Tracey Morgan) the idea to leave Calvin on their doorstep as an abandoned baby

Hands up anyone who can't figure out what occurs next—you'll now be asked to stick around while everyone else leaves early (phew!) for the Dan Savage column.

Okay, here's the deal, folks—it's a Wayans brothers movie, which means that it's all about pee, poop, boobs, farts, knees to the groin, and mild sexual or racial humour. You either enjoy the constant recycling of these jokes—from White Girls to Scary Movie—or you retch at the very thought of sitting through them over and over and over again.

Class dismissed.

Marlon, Shawn and Keenen Ivory all had their hands in the script, which feels like it was hammered out over pizza and beers—especially after all the beers had been drunk. Beyond the one funny moment of seeing Marlon swaddled in baby clothes they had to come up with as many cheap and stupid laughs as they could to keep the enterprise going. They filmed it and we are all poorer for it

Ducky Doolittle speaks

Sex, life, and the death of Knockers the Clown

MY MESSY BEDROOM
JOSEY VOGELS

DUCKY'S A LITTLE TAKEN ABACK WHEN I arrive for lunch with a copy of her five-year-old fanzine Dildo! It's the "I Love Pussy" issue, which features, among other things, the perfect recipe for "pussy"

Apparently, Tofu Wu Wu—1 block of soft tofu, 1 can of 100% pineapple juice, and salt—tastes just like vagina.

She may be beyond her wacky days as a "self-proclaimed crackpot scientist and sexologist," taste-testing foods to come up with the perfect pussy recipe but, now, even as a serious sex educator, Ducky is far from ordinary.

A typical day might involve doing a workshop for a room full of virginal Orthodox Jewish women, having Kim Cattrell show up for one of her performances, or having her luggage stolen... with her taxidermy chipmunk inside.

Ducky's new book—Sex With the Lights On: 200 Illuminating Sex Questions Answered—is the culmination of well over a decade of experience confronting her and everyone else's sexuality. From her days as a peep show girl in New York City to working at Babeland, a sex-positive sex shop in Lower Manhattan to well, doing workshops for Orthodox Jewish women.

UNDERSTAYED HER WELCOME

In between, there's been the erotic writing, some fetish modeling, selling her used undies online, oh, and that period when she'd dress up as "Knockers the Clown," sit on birthday cakes on stage, and give lectures on the penises of the animal kingdom or objects found in human rectums. (According to Ducky, the medical literature at the time documented 16,000 cases of things found in people's rectum, and nope, not one single gerbil.)

"Knockers is dead," proclaims Ducky when I raise her colourful clown past.

"She was an honest piece of who I am, but she was like a bad hairdo I had in the '80s. It was time to let her go."

Ducky's hardcore fans aren't quite so willing. Every time she declares the death of Knockers publicly, she gets a flurry of emails from fans reprooching her for saying such a thing.

Still, Ducky's not the type to overstay any period of her life.

"For most of my life, I've had very little intent," she tells me. "I've just followed life where it took me. As long as it paid the rent."

That's what years of being orphaned and homeless and thankful to be alive will do to you.

"I never expected to live this long," confesses Ducky.

Thanks to birth defects likely caused by the fact that her mother was addicted to painkillers while pregnant, Ducky spent much of her childhood in leg braces and corrective glasses that gave her a "humongous googly eye."

Beyond making her the compassionate, ever-evolving person that she is, these early challenges had their physical benefits as well.

Learning to retain bladder control after so many years using a catheter strengthened Ducky's PC muscles to the point that she could orgasm just by flexing them.

A wicked sense of humour has been another side benefit.

"With a name like Ducky Doolittle, people can't take me too seriously," she laughs.

> "There is nothing new when it comes to sex. There is no revolutionary new orgasm out there."
> DUCKY DOOLITTLE

Ironically, it's her humour that allows her to engage people in a serious dialogue about sexuality.

Teaching sexuality is like teaching another life skill, she says, much like having having a nutritionist teach you about food or a financial adviser show you how to handle your money.

"We need to break the isolation surrounding sexuality," she explains. "As with money or food, if you stay isolated and don't deal with your issues, you end up in debt or with an eating disorder... or a potato stuck up your butt."

Also, as with food and money, she says there are no magic, secret formulas for success when it comes to sex.

SEXY AS YOU WANNA BE

"Despite Cosmo promising you 'six new sex secrets that will blow your mind' there is nothing new when it comes to sex," says Ducky. "There is no revolutionary new orgasm out there that you can or can't have."

She'd much rather people be less obsessed with what the rest of the world is doing and spend time learning how to live in our own skin, finding pleasure wherever we can find it.

And she'd love young women to stop hating themselves.

"Women are so into self-loathing," Ducky complains. "No person or cream can define your beauty and how sexy you are, so stop comparing yourself."

Not that you need to stand on a rooftop and tell everyone you're the best, she adds. "Well... maybe once in a while... when no one's around," she laughs.

As for guys, Ducky wishes we could get beyond our society's "all men are horny dogs" simplification of male sexuality.

"If you set the bar low, they'll reach for it," says Ducky. And hopefully, they won't stick it in their butt.

Making it work

Her mom turns you like crazely, you say...

MY BOYFRIEND OF THREE YEARS HAS A lower libido than I do and rarely wants to do anything sexual. For a variety of reasons, I will not DTMFA. We no longer have arguments about this, but I do feel a bit lonesome for the type of physical contact he won't provide.

Now comes the dirty part: I have a couple of male friends who would happily do the things that my boyfriend isn't interested in doing. I have discussed this idea with my boyfriend, but he is resistant. I think it wouldn't bother him as much as he believes it would. An occasional tryst with one of my pals isn't something that would have much of an effect on our relationship. I'm just looking for him to okay a shortlist of people we know, so that I have somewhere to turn during the months-long periods when he has no sex drive. How can I convince him?

Playing Allowed Looks Sweet

We'll get to your issues in a moment, PALS, but first an issue of my own: I've been abusing DTMFA letters of late—that is, I've been using a lot of questions from readers who need to "dump the motherfucker already." As I've pointed out in past columns, letters from people who need to DTMFA account for more than half the mail advice professionals like myself receive. If we aren't careful, DTMFA letters can dominate our advice columns, making them monotonous.

In my defense, gentle reader, while I may be too quick to issue DTMFA orders, far too many of my colleagues go out of their way to avoid telling their readers to DTMFA. Confronted with a marriage damaged beyond repair, other advice professionals offer up soothing platitudes and inspire false hopes. They do this because most of my colleagues share an idealized reverence for the institution of marriage and fear calling for the end of any marriage, no matter how fatal its flaws. "Seek counseling," they'll say, in a futile attempt to salvage the unsalvageable.

While I never make the mistake of attempting to salvage the unsalvageable, my carelessness of late has led to too little relationship-salvaging advice appearing in this space. So for the next few weeks I intend to help couples work through their issues in this space, not just order them to part.

Okay, PALS, I was completely on your side until "I'm looking for him to okay a shortlist of people we know." So long as your shortlist includes mutual friends, there's no way for your boyfriend to okay this arrangement without feeling utterly humiliated. If he gives you permission to sleep with mutual friends, then his friends will know that he's sexually inadequate, and he'll know that they know, and they'll know that he knows that they know. Can you see how he might have a problem with that?

SAVAGE LOVE
DAN SAVAGE

The only way to get him to agree to your getting a little on the side, PALS, is to ask for permission to get your needs met elsewhere once in a while—and to promise him that you will only mess around with friends drawn exclusively from your social orbit. No mutuals, none of his friends. Make him that promise, PALS, even if you don't intend to keep it. Good luck!

i am a 22 yr old man that thought i would be happy with my wife for the wrest of my life, but after a year of cheeting on my wife with her own mom, i am in love with her mom. she is 44 but she has the experience and beauty. we go wild in bed makin love for hours and she swollows which turns me like crazely. i dont want to be with my wife no more. what should i do?

Marreed Man

This helpful shit is harder than I thought. But here goes: A husband should be able to discuss anything with his wife, MM. You should be able to share your deepest secrets with her, your innermost thoughts, your fondest hopes for the future. When a man can't tell his wife that his hopes for the future include a lot more oral sex from her mom, then something is wrong. Your marriage could be in trouble. I urge you to seek counseling.

I'm a 25-year-old straight male with a wonderful girlfriend. The other night I made some comment about how lucky I am to get such great head all the time. She responded by telling me that I was lucky, considering I almost never go down on her, and when I do it's not for very long. It was true. I've been an asshole. The next time we got into it I ended up going down on her for a long time and she told me it was the best I'd ever done. Everything's fine, right? Wrong.

My bottom-row front teeth are just a tiny bit crooked and one of them scraped the shit out of the little flap of skin along the bottom of my tongue while I ate her out. The pain was excruciating. Is this a common problem? Should I just keep doing it to develop a callus beneath my tongue?

Sad, Confused, Raw, Amateur Pussy Eater

I read somewhere once that you can get that little flap of skin snipped—I would Google it myself, SCRAPE, but I'm sitting in a bar in Saugatuck, Michigan, helping myself to some of the really terrific margaritas they make at Phil's, a bar that doesn't have Internet access. So Google it yourself, okay?

I was appalled by the advice you gave LIFE, the man sleeping with a woman in an abusive marriage. You told him to run, and doubted the woman's claims of abuse, calling them "too perfectly monstrous." My mother and my whole family were abused by my father, and most of the time she wasn't believed. Discrediting the victim by saying she's "lying" probably made all abused women who read your column recall the times they were called liars. You should not perpetuate the idea that abused women are really lying and that abusive husbands really aren't capable of harming someone that much.

R.

I never intended to deny the reality of domestic violence, R. Too many women are monstrously abused; there was a story last week in the Detroit Free Press about a Michigan man who tore off his wife's right arm. But the refusal to believe any woman's claims of abuse should not, in my opinion, be replaced by a blanket acceptance of any woman's claim of abuse. (If all claims of abuse are to be accepted at face value, why bother with domestic-violence charges or rape trials?) Women should get the benefit of the doubt as their lives—and right arms—may be at stake, but even that posture presupposes the possibility of doubt. That's why I advised LIFE to check out the part of his girlfriend's story that was verifiable: Her claim that her husband had once been prosecuted for rape. If it checks out, that goes a long way toward establishing her credibility. If it doesn't, well, then it doesn't. People do lie, R., as I'm sure you know. And women are people, as I'm sure you'd agree.

A lot of people took issue with my advice for LIFE. To read their responses, go to www.thestranger.com/savage/abuse.
